Reading makes a full man, conference a ready man, and writing an exact man; and therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that he doth not. Bacon.

When they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves. Acts, iv. 15.

He was thought to confer with the lord Colepeper upon the subject; but had some particular thoughts, upon which he then conferred with nobody. Clarendon, b. viii.

The Christian princess in her tent confers

With fifty of your learn'd philosophers;

Whom with such eloquence she does persuade,

That they are captives to her reasons made. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

TO CONFER. v. a.

1. To compare; to examine by comparison with other things of the same kind.

The words in the 8th verse, conferred with the same words in the 20th, make it manifest. Kaleigh's History of the World.

chair or seat, where the priest sits to hear confessions. Dict.

CONFESSOR. n. f. [confesseur, French.]

1. One who makes profession of his faith in the face of danger.
He who dies for religion is a martyr; he who suffers for it is a confessor.
The doctrine in the thirty-nine articles is so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without danger to our religion, which hath been sealed with the blood of so many martyrs and confessors. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Was not this an excellent confessor at least, if not a martyr in this cause? Stillfleet.
The patience and fortitude of a martyr or confessor lie concealed in the flourishing times of Christianity. Addison's Spect.
It was the assurance of a resurrection that gave patience to the confessor, and courage to the martyr. Rogers, Sermon viii.

2. He that hears confessions, and prescribes rules and measures of penitence.
See that Claudio
Be executed by nine to-morrow morning;
Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar'd;
For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage. Shakespeare.
If you find any sin that lies heavy upon you, disburthen yourself of it into the bosom of your confessor, who stands between God and you to pray for you. Taylor.
One must be trusted; and he thought her fit,
As passing prudent, and a parlous wit:
To this sagacious confessor he went,
And told her. Dryden's Wife of Bath.

3. He who confesses his crimes.
CONFEST. adj. [a poetical word for confessed] Open; known; acknowledged; not concealed; not disputed.
But wherefore should I seek,

Society is built upon trust, and trust upon confidence of one another's integrity. South's Sermons.

2. Trust in his own abilities or fortune; security; opposed to dejection or timidity.
Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence:
Do not go forth to-day. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
His times, being rather prosperous than calm, had raised his confidence by success. Bacon's Henry VII.
He had an ambition and vanity, and a confidence in himself, which sometimes intoxicated, and transported, and exposed him. Clarendon.

3. Vicious boldness; false opinion of his own excellencies; opposed to modesty.
These fervent reproachers of things established by publick authority, are always confident and bold-spirited men; but their confidence, for the most part, riseth from too much credit given to their own wits, for which cause they are seldom free from errors. Hooker, Dedication.

4. Consciousness of innocence; honest boldness; firmness of integrity.
Be merciful unto them which have not the confidence of good works. 2 Esd. viii. 36.
Just confidence, and native righteousness,
And honour. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 1056.

5. Trust in the goodness of another.
Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confi- dence towards God. 1 Jo. iii. 21.

6. That which gives or causes confidence, boldness, or security.
CONFIDENT. adj. [from confide.]

1. Assured beyond doubt.

resolve he can never fall. Hammond on Fundamentals.

I am confident, that very much may be done towards the improvement of philosophy. Boyle

2. Positive; affirmative; dogmatical.

3. Secure of success; without fear of miscarriage.
Both valiant, as men despising death; both confident, as un-wonted to be overcome. Sidney.
Douglas, and the Hot-spur both together,
Are confident against the world in arms. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
He not confident in a plain way. Eccles. xxxii. 21.
People forget how little they know, when they grow confi- dent upon any present state of things. South's Sermons.

4. Without suspicion; trusting without limits.
He, true knight,
No lesser of her honour confident,
Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring. Shal. Cymbeline.
Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kind to thee. Shakesp. Tit. and Andr.

5. Bold to a vice; elated with false opinion of his own excellencies; impudent.
CONFIDENT. n. f. [from confide.] One trusted with secrets.
If ever it comes to this, that a man can say of his confident,
he would have deceived me, he has said enough. South.
You love me for no other end,
But to become my confident and friend;
As such, I keep no secret from your sight. Dryden's Aureng.

CONFIDENTLY. adv. [from confident.]

1. Without doubt; without fear of miscarriage.
We shall not be ever the less likely to meet with success, if we do not expect it too confidently. Atterbury's Sermons.

The maid becomes a youth; no more delay
Your vows, but look, and confidently pay. Dryden.

3. Without appearance of doubt; without suspecting any failure or deficiency; positively; dogmatically.
Many men least of all know what they themselves most confidently boast. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
It is strange how the ancients took up experiments upon credit, and yet did build great matters upon them: the observation of some of the best of them, delivered confidently, is, that a vessel filled with ashes will receive the like quantity of water as if it had been empty; but this is utterly untrue.
Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 34.
Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wise men will conclude firmly. South.

CONFIDENTNESS. n. f. [from confident.] Favourable opinion of one's own power; assurance. Dict.

CONFIGURATION. n. f. [configuration, French.]

1. The form of the various parts of any thing, as they are adapted to each other.
The different effects of fire and water, which we call heat and cold, result from the so differing configuration and agitation of their particles. Glanville's Scept. c. 12.
No other account can be given of the different animal secretions, than the different configuration and action of the solid parts. Arbutnot on Aliments.
There is no plattick virtue concerned in shaping them, but the configurations of the particles whereof they consist. Woodw.

2. The face of the horoscope, according to the aspects of the planets towards each other at any time.

TO CONFIGURE. v. a. [from figura, Latin.] To dispose into any form.
Mother earth brought forth legs, arms, and other members of the body, scattered and distinct, at their full growth; which coming together, cementing, and so configuring themselves into human shape, made lusty men. Bentley's Sermons.

CONFINE. n. f. [confinis, Lat.] It had formerly the accent on the last syllable.] Common boundary; border; edge.
Here in these confines slyly have I lurk'd,
To watch the waining of mine enemies. Shakesp. Rich. III.
You are old:
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The confines of the river Niger, where the negroes are, are well watered. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 399.
'Twas ebbing darkness, past the noon of night,
And Phosphor on the confines of the night. Dryd. Fables.
The idea of duration, equal to a revolution of the sun, is applicable to duration, where no motion was; as the idea of a foot, taken from bodies here, to distances beyond the confines of the world, where are no bodies. Locke.

CONFINE. adj. [confinis, Latin.] Bordering upon; beginning where the other ends; having one common boundary.

TO CONFINE. v. n. To border upon; to touch on different territories.
Half lost, I seek
What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds
Confine with heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 975.
Full in the midst of this created space,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
Confining on all three. Dryden.

TO CONFINE. v. a. [confiner, Fr. confinis, Latin.]

1. To bound; to limit.

2. To

2. To shut up; to imprison; to immure; to restrain within certain limits.

I'll not over the threshold.—

—Fy, you confine yourself most unreasonably: come, you must go visit the good lady. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I had been

As broad and gen'ral as the casing air;

But now I'm cabbin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in

To saucy doubts.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. To restrain; to tie up to.

He is to confine himself to the compass of numbers, and the slavery of rhyme. Dryden.

CONFINELESS. adj. [from confine.] Boundless; unlimited; unbounded; without end.

Black Macbeth

Will seem as pure as snow, and the poor state

Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd

With my confineless harms.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CONFINEMENT. n. f. [from confine.] Imprisonment; incarceration; restraint of liberty.

Our hidden foes,

Now joyful from their long confinement rose. Dryd Virgil.

The mind hates restraint, and is apt to fancy itself under confinement, when the sight is pent up in a narrow compass.

As to the numbers who are under this restraint, people do not seem so much surpris'd at the confinement of some as the liberty of others.

CONFINER. n. f. [from confine.]

1. A borderer; one that lives upon confines; one that inhabits the extreme parts of a country.

The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners. Shakes. Cymbeline.

Happy confiners you of other lands,

That shift your soil.

Daniel's Civil War.

2. A near neighbour.

Though gladness and grief be opposite in nature, yet they are such neighbours and confiners in art, that the least touch of a pencil will translate a crying into a laughing face. Wotton.

3. One which touches upon two different regions.

The participles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such as have no local motion; such as oysters Bacon.

CONFINITY. n. f. [confinitas, Latin.] Nearness; neighbourhood. Dict.

—With brother's love I do it.—

—And let heav'n

Witness how dear I hold this confirmation! Shak. Hen. VIII.

2. Evidence by which any thing is ascertained; additional proof.

A false report hath

Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment. Shakesp.

The sea-captains answered, that they would perform his command; and, in confirmation thereof, promised not to do any thing which becomed not valiant men. Knolles's History.

3. Proof; convincing testimony.

Wanting frequent confirmation in a matter so confirmable, their affirmation carrieth but slow persuasion. Brown.

The arguments brought by Christ for the confirmation of his doctrine, were in themselves sufficient. South's Sermons.

4. An ecclesiastical rite.

What is prepared for in catechising, is, in the next place, performed by confirmation; a most profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the practice of the apostles, which consists in two parts: the child's undertaking, in his own name, every part of the baptismal vow, (having first approved himself to understand it); and to that purpose, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now (as in baptism) as his procurator to undertake for him, but as a witness to testify his entering this obligation. Hammond on Fundamentals.

CONFIRMATOR. n. f. [from confirmo, Latin.] An attester; he that puts a matter past doubt.

There wants herein the definitive confirmator, and test of things uncertain, the sense of man. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONFIRMATORY. adj. [from confirm.] Giving additional testimony; establishing with new force.

CONFIRMEDNESS. n. f. [from confirmed.] Confirmed state; radication.

If the difficulty arise from the confirmedness of habit, every resistance, as it weakens the habit, abates the difficulty. Decay of Piety.

CONFIRMER. n. f. [from confirm.] One that confirms; one that produces evidence or strength; an attester; an establisher.

Be these sad sighs confirmers of thy words?

Then speak again.

Shakespeare's King John.

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster: they are both the confirmers of false reckonings. Shak.

CONFISCABLE. adj. [from confiscate.] Liable to forfeiture.

TO CONFISCATE. v. a. [confiscare, confisquer, i. e. in publicum addicere, from fiscus, which originally signifieth a hamper, pannier, basket, or freil; but metonymically the emperor's treasure, because it was anciently kept in such hampers. Cowel.] To transfer private property to the prince or publick, by way of penalty for an offence.

It was judged that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.

Whatever fish the vulgar fry excel,

Belong to Cæsar, wheresoe'er they swim,

By their own worth confiscated to him. Dryd. Juv. Sat. iv.

CONFISCATE. adj. [from the verb.] Transferred to the publick as forfeit.

Thy lands and goods

Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate

Unto the state of Venice.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

CONFISCATION. n. f. [from confiscate.] The act of transferring the forfeited goods of criminals to publick use.

It was in every man's eye, what great forfeitures and confiscations he had at that present to help himself. Bacon's H. VII.

Bare

Bare unhoused trunks
To the conflicting elements exposed,
Answer meer nature. Shakespeare's Timon.
You shall hear under the earth a horrible thundering of fire and water conflicting together. Bacon's Natural History.
A man would be content to strive with himself, and conflict with great difficulties, in hopes of a mighty reward. Tillotson.
Lash'd into foam, the fierce conflicting brine
Seems o'er a thousand raging waves to burn. Thomf. Winter.
A CONFLICT. n. f. [conflictus, Latin.]
1. A violent collision, or opposition of two substances.
Pour dephlegmed spirit of vinegar upon salt of tartar, and there will be such a conflict or ebullition, as if there were scarce two more contrary bodies in nature. Boyle's Scept. Chym.
2. A combat; a fight between two. It is seldom used of a general battle
The luckless conflict with the giant stout,
Wherein captiv'd, of life or death he stood in doubt.
Fairy Queen, b. i. can. 7. stanza. 26.
It is my father's face,
Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd. Shak. H. VI.
3. Contest; strife; contention.
There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit between them.—Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off. Shakespeare.
4. Struggle; agony; pang.
No assurance touching victories can make present conflicts so sweet and easy, but nature will shun and shrink from them.
Hooker, b. v. sect. 48.
If he attempt this great change, with what labour and con- flict must he accomplish it? Rogers's Sermon.
He perceiv'd
Th' unequal conflict then, as angels look
On dying faints. Thomson's Summer, l. 1190.
CONFLUENCE. n. f. [confluo, Latin.]
1. The junction or union of several streams.
You see this confluence, this great flood of visiters. Shakes.
Nimrod, who usurped dominion over the rest, sat down in the very confluence of all those rivers which watered Paradise. Raleigh's History of the World.
Bagdet is beneath the confluence of Tigris and Euphrates.

I have treated of the sex conformably to this definition. Addis.
CONFORMATION. n. f. [French; conformatio, Latin.]
1. The form of things as relating to each other; the particular texture, and consistence of the parts of a body, and their disposition to make a whole; as, light of different co- lours is reflected from bodies according to their different confor- mation.
Varieties are found in the different natural shapes of the mouth, and several conformations of the organs. Holder's Elem.
Where there happens to be such a structure and conforma- tion of the earth, as that the fire may pass freely unto these spiracles, it then readily gets out. Woodward's Nat. History.
2. The act of producing suitableness, or conformity to any thing.
Virtue and vice, sin and holiness, and the conformation of our hearts and lives to the duties of true religion and morality, are things of more consequence than the furniture of understanding. Watts.
CONFORMIST. n. f. [from conform.] One that complies with the worship of the church of England; not a dissenter.
CONFORMITY. n. f. [from conform.]
1. Similitude; resemblance; the state of having the same character of manners or form.
By the knowledge of truth, and exercise of virtue, man, amongst the creatures of this world, aspireth to the greatest conformity with God. Hooker, b. i. sect. 5.
Judge not what is best
By pleasure, though to nature seeming meet;
Created as thou art to nobler end,
Holy and pure, conformity divine! Milton's Paradise Lost.
Space and duration have a great conformity in this, that they are justly reckoned amongst our simple ideas. Locke.
This metaphor would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and the sensitive taste. Addison's Spectator, No. 400.
2. It has in some authors with before the model to which the conformity is made.
The end of all religion is but to draw us to a conformity with God. Decay of Piety.
3. In some to.
We cannot be otherwise happy but by our conformity to God. Tillotson.
Conformity in building to other civil nations, hath disposed us to let our old wooden dark houses fall to decay. Graunt.
4. Consistency.
Many instances prove the conformity of the essay with the notions of Hippocrates. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
CONFORTATION. n. f. [from conforto, a low Latin word.]
Collation of strength; corroboration.
For corroboration and confortation, take such bodies as are of astringent quality, without manifest cold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
TO CONFOUND. v. a. [confondre, Fr. confundo, Latin.]
1. To mingle things so that their several forms or natures cannot be discerned.
Let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech. Gen. xi. 7.
2. To perplex; to compare or mention without due distinction.
A fluid body and a wetting liquor are wont, because they agree in many things, to be confounded. Boyle's Hist. of Fluidity.
They who strip not ideas from the marks men use for them, but confound them with words, must have endless dispute. Locke.
3. To disturb the apprehension by indistinct words or notions.
I am yet to think, that men find their simple ideas agree, though, in discourse, they confound one another with different names. Locke.
4. To throw into consternation; to perplex; to terrify; to amaze; to astonish; to stupify.
So spake the son of God; and Satan stood
A while as mute, confounded what to say. Milt. Par. Reg.
Now with furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pepe's St. Cecilia.
5. To destroy; to overthrow.

Let them be confounded in all their power and might, and let their strength be broken. Dan. xxi.

These four nations are every where mixt in the Scriptures, because they dwelt confusedly together. Raleigh's History.

2. Indistinctly; one mingled with another.

Th' inner court with horror, noise and tears,

Confus'dly fill'd; the women's shrieks and cries

The arch'd vaults re-echo.

Denham.

On mount Vesuvius next he fix'd his eyes,

And saw the smoaking tops confus'dly rise;

A hideous ruin!

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

I viewed through a prism, and saw them most confusedly defined, so that I could not distinguish their smaller parts from one another. Newton's Opt.

Heroes and heroines shouts confus'dly rise,

And base and treble voices strike the skies.

Pope.

3. Not clearly; not plainly.

He confusedly and obscurely delivered his opinion. Clarendon.

4. Tumultuously; hastily; not deliberately; not exactly.

The propriety of thoughts and words, which are the hidden beauties of a play, are but confusedly judged in the vehemence of action. Dryden's Dedicat. to the Spanish Fryar.

CONFUSEDNESS. n. s. [from confused.] Want of distinctness; want of clearness.

Hitherto these titles of honour carry a kind of confusedness, and rather betokened a successive office than an established dignity. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The cause of the confusedness of our notions, next to natural inability, is want of attention. Norris.

CONFUSION. n. s. [from confuse.]

1. Irregular mixture; tumultuous medly; disorder.

God, only wise, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought;

As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,

By tongues confusion was to ruin brought.

2. Tumult.

God is not a god of sedition and confusion, but of order and of peace. Hooker, Preface.

This is a happier and more comely time,

Than when these fellows ran about the streets

Crying confusion.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Indistinct combination.

The confusion of two different ideas, which a customary connexion of them in their minds hath made to them almost one, fills their head with false views, and their reasonings with false consequences. Locke.

4. Overthrow; destruction.

The strength of their illusion,

Shall draw him in to his confusion. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Astonishment; distraction of mind; hurry of ideas.

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,

And fear in ev'ry heart,

When waves on waves, and gulphs in gulphs,

O'ercame the pilot's art.

Spectator, No. 489.

CONFUTABLE. adj. [from confute.] Possible to be disproved; possible to be shewn false.

At the last day, that inquisitor shall not present to God a bundle of calumnies, or confutable accusations; but will offer unto his omniscience a true list of our transgressions. Brown.

CONFUTATION. n. s. [confutatio, Latin.] The act of confuting; disproof.

TO CONFUTE. v. a. [confuto, Latin.] To convict of error or falsehood; to disprove.

He could on either side dispute;

Confute, change hands, and still confute.

Hudibras.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live as if there were none, but, when he dies, to find himself confuted in the flames, must be the height of woe. South.

CONGE. n. s. [conge, French.]

1. Act of reverence; bow; courtesy.

The captain salutes you with conge profound,

And your ladyship curt'sies half way to the ground. Swift.

2. Leave; farewell.

So, courteous conge both did give and take,

With right hands plighted, pledges of good will. Fairy Qu.

TO CONGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take leave.

I have congeed with the duke, and done my adieu with his nearest. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

CONGE D'ELIRE is French; and signifies, in common law, the king's permission royal to a dean and chapter, in time of vacation, to chuse a bishop. The king, as sovereign patron of all archbishopricks, bishopricks, and other ecclesiastical benefices, had, in ancient times, the free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities; investing them first per baculum & anulum, and afterwards by his letters patent. In process of time he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should, at every vacation, before they chuse, demand of the king a conge d'elire, that is, licence to proceed to election. Cowel.

A woman, when she has made her own choice, for form's sake, sends a conge d'elire to her friends. Spectator, No. 475.

CONGE. n. s. [In architecture.] A moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another: such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture. Chambers.

TO CONGEAL. v. a. [congelare, Latin.]

1. To turn, by frost, from a fluid to a solid state.

What more miraculous thing may be told,

Than ice, which is congeal'd with senseless cold,

Should kindle fire by wonderful device?

Spenser.

In whose capacious womb

A vapoury deluge lies, to snow congealed. Thomson's Winter.

2. To bind or fix, as by cold.

Oh, gentlemen, see! see, dead Henry's wounds

Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh. Shak. R. III.

Too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood. Shakespeare.

TO CONGEAL. v. n. To concrete; to gather into a mass by cold.

When water congeals, the surface of the ice is smooth and level, as the surface of the water was before. Burnet's Theory.

CONGEALMENT. n. s. [from congeal.] The clot formed by congelation; concretion.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends;

Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyful tears

Wash the congealment from your wounds. Sb. Ant. and Cleop.

CONGEABLE. adj. [from congeal.] Susceptible of congelation; capable of losing its fluidity.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers: dense, rare, tangible, pneumatical, fixed, hard, soft, congeable, not congeable, liquefiable, not liquefiable. Bacon, No. 839.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fixable in the fire, and congeable again by cold into brittle globes or crystals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONGELATION.

CONGELATION. n. f. [from congel.]

1. Act of turning fluids to solids.

The capillary tubes are obstructed either by outward compression or congelation of the fluid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

There are congelations of the redundant water, precipitations, and many other operations. Arbutnot on Air.

2. State of being congealed, or made solid.

Many waters and springs will never freeze; and many parts in rivers and lakes, where there are mineral eruptions, will still persist without congelation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONGENER. n. f. [Latin.] Of the same kind or nature.

The cherry-tree has been often grafted on the laurel, to which it is a congener. Miller.

CONGENEROUS. adj. [congener, Latin.] Of the same kind; arising from the same original.

Those bodies, being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

From extreme and lasting colds proceeds a great run of apoplexies, and other congenerous diseases. Arbutnot on Air.

CONGENEROUSNESS. n. f. [from congenerous.] The quality of being from the same original; belonging to the same class. Dict.

CONGENIAL. adj. [con and genius, Latin.] Partaking of the same genius; kindred; cognate.

He sprung, without any help, by a kind of congenial composition, as we may term it, to the likeness of our late sovereign and master. Wotton.

You look with pleasure on those things which are somewhat congenial, and of a remote kindred to your own conceptions. Dryden's Dedication of Juvenal.

Smit with the love of sister arts we came,

And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope's Epist.

He acquires a courage, and stiffness of opinion, not at all congenial with him. Swift on the Dissentions in Athens and Rome.

CONGENIALITY. n. f. [from congenial.] Participation of the same genius; cognation of mind.

CONSCIENCE. n. s. [conscientia, Latin.]

1. The knowledge or faculty by which we judge of the goodness or wickedness of ourselves.

When a people have no touch of conscience, no sense of their evil doings, it is bootless to think to restrain them. Spenser.

On earth,
Who against faith, and conscience, can be heard Infallible? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 529.
Such a conscience has not been wanting to itself, in endeavouring to get the clearest information about the will of God.
South's Sermons.

But why must those be thought to 'scape, that feel
Those rods of scorpions, and those whips of steel,
Which conscience shakes? Dryden's Juv. Sat. 13.
No courts created yet, nor cause was heard;
But all was safe, for conscience was their guard. Dryd. Ovid.
Conscience signifies that knowledge which a man hath of his own thoughts and actions; and, because if a man judgeth fairly of his actions, by comparing them with the law of God, his mind will approve or condemn him, this knowledge or conscience may be both an accuser and a judge. Swift.

2. Justice; the estimate of conscience; the determination of conscience; honesty.

This is thank worthy, if a man, for conscience toward God, endure grief. 1 Pet. ii. 19.

The rest stood trembling, struck with awe divine,
Æneas only conscious to the sign,
Presag'd th' event. Dryden's Æn.

Roses or honey cannot be thought to smell or taste their own sweetness, or an organ be conscious to its musick, or gunpowder to its flashing or noise. Bentley's Sermons.

4. Bearing witness by conscience to any thing.
The queen had been solicitous with the king on his behalf, being conscious to herself that he had been encouraged by her. Clarendon, b. viii.

CONSCIOUSLY. adv. [from conscious.] With knowledge of one's own actions.

If these perceptions, with their consciousness, always remained in the mind, the same thinking thing would be always consciously present. Locke.

CONSCIOUSNESS.

CONSCIOUSNESS. n. f. [from conscious.]

1. The perception of what passes in a man's own mind. Locke.
If spirit be without thinking, I have no idea of any thing left; therefore consciousness must be its essential attribute. Watts.
Such ideas, no doubt, they would have had, had not their consciousness to themselves, of their ignorance of them, kept them from so idle an attempt. Locke.
2. Internal sense of guilt, or innocence.
No man doubts of a Supreme Being, until, from the consciousness of his provocations, it become his interest there should be none. Government of the Tongue, f. 3.

CONSTABLE. n. f. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown, long disused in England, but lately subsisting in France; where the constable commanded the mareschals, and was the first officer of the army. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferior constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables, because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of like nature, but inferior authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as constable of the Tower, of Dover castle, of the castle of Carnarvon; but these are properly castellani, or governors of castles. Cowel. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,

And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shak.

The knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The constable being a sober man, and known to be an enemy to those acts of sedition, went among them, to observe what they did. Clarendon.

2. To over-run the CONSTABLE. [Perhaps from conte stable, Fr. the settled, firm and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth: a low phrase.

CO'NSTABLESHIP. n. f. [from constable.] The office of a constable.

This keepership is annexed to the constableness of the castle, and that granted out in lease. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CONSTANCY. n. f. [constantia, Latin.]

1. Immutability; perpetuity; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker, b. i.

2. Consistency; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution; firmness; steadiness; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,

Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat;

In vain the syrens sing, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty; veracity; reality.

But all the story of the night told over,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shakespeare.

CONSTANT. adj. [constans, Latin.]

1. Firm; fixed; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle's History of Firmness.

2. Unvaried; unchanged; immutable; durable.

3. Firm; resolute; determined; immoveable; unshaken.

Some shrewd contents,

Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:

Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world

Could turn so much the constitution

Of any constant man. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

4. Free from change of affection.

VOL. I.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends. Sidney, b. ii.

5. Certain; not various; steady; firmly adherent.

Now, through the land, his care of souls he stretch'd;

And like a primitive apostle preach'd;

Still chearful, ever constant to his call;

By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

He shewed his firm adherence to religion as modelled by our national constitution; and was constant to its offices in devotion, both in publick and in his family. Addison, Freeholder.

CO'NSTANTLY. adv. [from constant.] Unvariably; perpetually; certainly; steadily.

It is strange that the fathers should never appeal; nay, that they should not constantly do it. Tillotson.

To CONSTE'LLATE. v. n. [constellatus, Latin.] To join lustre; to shine with one general light.

The several things which most engage our affections; do, in a transcendent manner, shine forth and constellate in God. Boyle.

These scattered perfections, which were divided among the several ranks of inferior natures, were summed up and constellated in ours. Glanv. Sceps. c. i.

CONSTELLA'TION. n. f. [from constellate.]

1. A cluster of fixed stars.

For the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light. Is. xlii. 10.

The earth, the air resounded;

The heav'ns and all the constellations rung. Milt. Par. Lost.

A constellation is but one;

Though 'tis a train of stars. Dryden.

2. An assemblage of splendours, or excellencies.

The condition is a constellation or conjuncture of all those gospel-graces, faith, hope, charity, self-denial, repentance, and the rest. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

CONSTERNA'TION. n. f. [from consterno, Latin.] Astonishment; amazement; alienation of mind by a surprise; surprise; wonder.

They find the same holy consternation upon themselves that Jacob did at Bethel, which he called the gate of heaven. South.

The natives, dubious whom

They must obey, in consternation wait,

'Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege. Philips.

To CONSTIPATE. v. a. [from constipo, Latin.]

1. To crowd together into a narrow room; to thicken; to condense.

Of cold, the property is to condense and constipate. Bacon.

It may, by amassing, cooling, and constipating of waters, turn them into rain. Ray on the Creation.

There might arise some vertiginous motions or whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms might be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there constipate one another into great solid globes. Bentley.

2. To stuff up, or stop by filling up the passages.

It is not probable that any aliment should have the quality of intirely constipating or shutting up the capillary vessels. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To bind the belly; or make costive.

CONSTIPA'TION. n. f. [from constipate.]

1. The act of crowding any thing into less room; condensation.

This worketh by the detention of the spirits, and constipation of the tangible parts. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 341.

It requires either absolute fulness of matter, or a pretty close constipation and mutual contact of its particles. Bentley.

2. Stoppage; obstruction by plenitude.

The inactivity of the gall occasions a constipation of the belly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONSTITUENT. adj. [constituens, Latin.] That which makes any thing what it is; necessary to existence; elemental; essential; that of which any thing consists.

Body, soul, and reason, are the three parts necessarily constituent of a man. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

All animals derived all the constituent matter of their bodies; successively, in all ages, out of this fund. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

It is impossible that the figures and sizes of its constituent particles, should be so justly adapted as to touch one another in every point. Bentley's Sermons.

CONSTITUENT. n. f.

1. The person or thing which constitutes or settles any thing in its peculiar state.

Their first composition and origination requires a higher and nobler constituent than chance. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

And to the center keep the parts confin'd. Blackmore.

To CoNSTRUE. v. a. [construo, Latin.]
1. To range words in their natural order; to disentangle transposition.
I'll teach mine eyes with meek humility,
Love-learned letters to her eyes to read;
Which

Which her deep wit, that true heart's thought can spell,
Will soon conceive, and learn to construe well. Spenser.
Virgil is so very figurative, that he requires (I may almost say) a grammar apart to construe him. Dryden.

Thus we are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves either from the ignorance or malice of our adversaries. Stillingsfleet's Defence of Discourse on Roman Idol.

2. To interpret; to explain; to shew the meaning.

I must crave that I be not so understood or construed, as if any such thing, by virtue thereof, could be done without the aid and assistance of God's most blessed spirit. Hooker, b. iii.

Construe the times to their necessities,

And you shall say, indeed, it is the time,

And not the king, that doth you injuries. Shak. Hen. IV.

When the word is construed into its idea, the double meaning vanishes. Addison on Ancient Medals.

To CONSTUPRATE. v. a. [constupro, Lat.] To violate;

fillement.

CONSUBSTA'NTIAL. adj. [cons. b. substantialis, Latin.]

1. Having the same essence or subsistence.

The Lord our God, is but one God: in which indivisible unity, notwithstanding we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself, we glorify that consubstantial word which is the Son; we bless and magnify that co-essential Spirit, eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker, b. v.

2. Being of the same kind or nature.

It continueth a body consubstantial with our bodies; a body of the same, both nature and measure, which it had on earth.

Hooker, b. v. f. 54.

In their conceits the human nature of Christ was not con- substantial to ours, but of another kind. Brerewood.

CONSUBSTANTIA'LITY. n. f. [from consubstantial.] Existence of more than one, in the same substance.

The eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven. Hammond on Fundamentals.

To CONSUBSTA'NTIATE. v. a. [from con and substantia, sulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard. Deutr. xviii. 11.

CONSUMABLE. adj. [from consume.] Susceptible of destruction; possible to be wasted, spent, or destroyed.

It does truly agree in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire; but yet there is this inconvenience, that it doth contract so much fuliginous matter from the earthy parts of the oil, though it was tried with some of the purest oil which is ordinary to be bought, that in a very few days it did choak and extinguish the flame. Wilkins's Mathem. Magick.

Our growing rich or poor depends only on, which is greater or less, our importation or exportation of consumable commodities. Locke.

To CONSUME. v. a. [consumo, Latin.] To waste; to spend;
to destroy.

Where two raging fires meet together,

They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shakespeare.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The lean, consumptive wench, with coughs decay'd,

Is call'd a pretty, tight, and slender maid.

By an exact regimen a consumptive person may hold out for years.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

CONSUMPTIVENESS. n. f. [from consumptive.] A tendency to a consumption.

CONSUMTILE. adj. [confutilis, Latin.] That is sewed or stitched together.

Diet.

TO CONTABULATE. v. a. [contabulo, Latin.] To floor with boards.

CONTABULATION. n. f. [contabulatio, Latin.] A joining of boards together; a boarding a floor.

CONTACT. n. f. [contactus, Latin.] Touch; close union; juncture of one body to another.

The Platonists hold, that the spirit of the lover doth pass into the spirits of the person loved, which causeth the desire of return into the body; whereupon followeth that appetite of contact and conjunction.

When the light fell so obliquely on the air, which in other places was between them, as to be all reflected, it seemed in that place of contact to be wholly transmitted.
Newton's Opt.

The air, by its immediate contact, may coagulate the blood which flows along the air-bladders.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

CONTACTION. n. f. [contactus, Latin.] The act of touching; a joining one body to another.

That deleterious it may be at some distance, and destructive without corporal contaction, there is no high improbability.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 7.

CONTAGION. n. f. [contagio, Latin.]

1. The emission from body to body by which diseases are communicated.

If we two be one, and thou play false,

I do digest the poison of thy flesh,

Being strumpeted by thy contagion.
Shakesp. Com. of Errors.

In infection and contagion from body to body, as the plague and the like, the infection is received many times by the body passive; but yet is, by the strength and good disposition thereof, repulsed.
Bacon.

2. Infection; propagation of mischief, or disease.

Nor will the goodness of intention excuse the scandal and contagion of example.
King Charles.

Down fell they,

And the dire hiss renew'd, and the dire form

Catch'd by contagion.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 544.

3. Pestilence; venomous emanations.

Will he steal out of his wholesome bed,

To dare the vile contagion of the night?
Shak. Jul. Caesar.

CONTAGIOUS. adj. [from contagio, Latin.] Infectious; caught by approach; poisonous; pestilential.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholly night,

From their misty jaws

Breathe foul, contagious darkness in the air.
Shak. Hen. VI.

We sicken soon from her contagious care,

Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair.
Prior.

CONTAGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contagious.] The quality of being contagious.

TO CONTAIN. v. a. [contineo, Latin.]

1. To hold as a vessel.

2. To comprise; as a writing.

There are many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.

Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture. 1 Pet. ii. 6.

3. To restrain; to with-hold; to keep within bounds.

All men should be contained in duty ever after, without the terrour of warlike forces.
Spenser on Ireland.

I tell you, sirs,

If you should smile, he grows impatient.—

—Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves.

Shakesp.

TO CONTAIN. v. n. To live in continence.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase, 'till I could no longer contain.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

CONTAINABLE. adj. [from contain.] Possible to be contained.

The air, containable within the cavity of the colipile, amounted to eleven grains.
Boyle.

TO CONTAMINATE. v. a. [contamino, Lat.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by base mixture.

Shall we now

Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?
Shak. Jul. Caesar.

A base pander holds the chamber-door,

Whilst by a slave, no gentler than a dog,

His fairest daughter is contaminated.
Shakesp. Henry V.

Do it not with poison; strangle her in her bed,

Even in the bed she hath contaminated.
Shakespeare's Othello.

I quickly shed

Some of his bastard-blood; and, in disgrace,

Bespoke him thus: contaminated, base,

And misbegotten blood I spill of thine.
Shak. Hen. VI. p. i.

Though it be necessitated, by its relation to flesh, to a terrestrial converse; yet 'tis like the sun, without contaminating its beams.
Glanv. Apol.

He that lies with another man's wife, propagates children in another's family for him to keep, and contaminates the honour thereof as much as in him lies.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

CONTAMINATE. adj. [from the verb.] Polluted; defiled.

What if this body, consecrate to thee,

By ruffian lust should be contaminate?
Shak. Com. of Err.

CONTAMINATION. n. f. [from contaminate.] Pollution; defilement.

CONTEMERATED. adj. [contemeratus, Latin.] Violated; polluted.
Diet.

TO CONTEMN. v. a. [contemno, Latin] To despise; to scorn; to slight; to disregard; to neglect; to defy.

Yet better thus, and known to be contemned,

Than still contemned and flattered.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

Pygmalion then the Tyrian sceptre sway'd;

One who contemn'd divine and human laws,

Then strife ensu'd.
Dryden's Virgil's Æneid.

CONTEMNER. n. f. [from contemn.] One that contemns; a despiser; a scorner.

He counsels him to persecute innovators of worship, not only as contemnners of the gods, but disturbers of the state.
South.

TO CONTEMPER. v. a. [contempero, Latin.] To moderate; to reduce to a lower degree by mixing something of opposite qualities.

The leaves qualify and temper the heat, and hinder the evaporation of moisture.
Ray on the Creation.

CONTEMPERAMENT. n. f. [from contempero, Latin.] The degree of any quality.

There is nearly an equal temperament of the warmth of our bodies to that of the hottest part of the atmosphere.
Derh.

TO CONTEMPERATE. v. a. [from temper.] To diminish any quality by something contrary; to moderate; to temper.

The mighty Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air, but refresh and humectate the earth.
Brown.

If blood abound, let it out, regulating the patient's diet, and temperating the humours.
Wiseman's Surgery.

CONTEMPERATION. n. f. [from temperate.]

1. The act of diminishing any quality by admixture of the contrary; the act of moderating or tempering.

The use of air, without which there is no continuation in life, is not nutrition, but the temperation of fervour in the heart.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Proportionate mixture; proportion.

There is not greater variety in men's faces, and in the temperations of their natural humours, than there is in their phantasies.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO CONTEMPLATE. v. a. [contemplor, Lat.] To consider with continued attention; to study; to meditate.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to contemplate what we have a great desire to know.
Watts.

TO CONTEMPLATE. v. n. To muse; to think studiously with long attention.

So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemplate.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Sapor had an heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contemplating over the same as if he had been Jupiter.
Peacham.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you.
Dryd. Jew. Preface.

CONTEMPLATION.

CONTEMPLATION. n. f. [from contemplate.]

1. Meditation; studious thought on any subject; continued attention.

How now, what serious contemplation are you in?

Contemplation is keeping the idea, which is brought into the mind, for some time actually in view. Locke.

2. Holy meditation; a holy exercise of the soul, employed in attention to sacred things.

I have breathed a secret vow,

To live in prayer and contemplation,

Only attended by Nerissa here. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

3. The faculty of study; opposed to the power of action.

There are two functions, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects; some of which entertain our speculation, others employ our actions. South.

CONTEMPLATIVE. adj. [from contemplate.]

1. Given to thought or study; studious; thoughtful.

Fixt and contemplative their looks,

Still turning over nature's books.

Denham.

2. Employed in study; dedicated to study.

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs: my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Contemplative men may be without the pleasure of discovering the secrets of state, and men of action are commonly without the pleasure of tracing the secrets of divine art. Grew's Cosmol.

3. Having the power of thought or meditation.

So many kinds of creatures might be to exercise the contemplative faculty of man. Ray on the Creation.

CONTEMPLATIVELY. adv. [from contemplative.] Thoughtfully; attentively; with deep attention.

CONTEMPLATOR. n. f. [Latin.] One employed in study; an enquirer after knowledge; a student.

In the Persian tongue the word magus imports as much as a contemplator of divine and heavenly science. Raleigh's History.

The Platonick contemplators reject both these descriptions, founded upon parts and colours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CONTEMPORARY. adj. [contemporain, French.]

1. Living in the same age; coetaneous.

Albert Durer was contemporary to Lucas. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

2. Born at the same time.

A grove born with himself he fees,

And loves his old contemporary trees.

3. Existing at the same point of time.

It is impossible to make the ideas of yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow, to be the same; or bring ages past and future together, and make them contemporary. Locke.

CONTEMPORARY. n. f. One who lives at the same time with another.

All this in blooming youth you have achiev'd;

Nor are your foil'd contemporaries griev'd. Dryden.

As he has been favourable to me, he will hear of his kindness from our contemporaries; for we are fallen into an age illiterate, censorious, and detracting. Dryd. Juv. Preface.

The active part of mankind, as they do most for the good of their contemporaries, very deservedly gain the greatest share in their applauses. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 40.

TO CONTEMPORISE. v. a. [con and tempus, Latin.] To make contemporary; to place in the same age.

The indifferency of their existences contemporised into our actions, admits a farther consideration.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 11.

CONTEMPT. n. f. [contemptus, Latin.]

1. The act of despising others; slight regard; scorn.

It was neither in contempt nor pride that I did not bow. Esth.

The shame of being miserable,

Exposes men to scorn and base contempt,

Even from their nearest friends.

Denham.

There is no action in the behaviour of one man towards another, of which human nature is more impatient than of contempt; it being a thing made up of these two ingredients, an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness and inability, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same belief and slight esteem of him.

South's Sermons.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden's Fables.

2. The state of being despised; vileness.

The place was like to come unto contempt. 2 Mac. iii. 18.

CONTEMPTIBLE. adj. [from contempt.]

1. Worthy of contempt; deserving scorn.

No man truly knows himself, but he groweth daily more contemptible in his own eyes. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

From no one vice exempt,

And most contemptible to shun contempt. Pope's Epistles.

2. Despised; scorned; neglected.

There is not so contemptible a plant or animal that does not confound the most enlarged understanding. Locke.

3. Scornful; apt to despise. This is no proper use.

If she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man hath a contemptible spirit. Shakespeare.

CONTEMPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from contemptible.] The state of being contemptible; the state of being despised; meanness; vileness; baseness; cheapness.

VOL. I.

2

Who, by a steady practice of virtue, comes to discern the contemptibleness of those baits wherewith he allures us.

Decay of Piety.

CONTEMPTIBLY. adv. [from contemptible.] Meanly; in a manner deserving contempt.

Know'st thou not

Their language, and their ways? They also know,

And reason not contemptibly. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

CONTEMPTUOUS. adj. [from contempt.] Scornful; apt to despise; using words or actions of contempt; insolent.

To neglect God all our lives, and know that we neglect him; to offend God voluntarily, and know that we offend him, casting our hopes on the peace which we trust to make at parting, is no other than a rebellious presumption, and even a contemptuous laughing to scorn and deriding of God, his laws and precepts. Raleigh's History of the World.

Some much averse I found, and wondrous harsh,

Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite. Milt. Agon.

Rome, the proudest part of the heathen world, entertained the most contemptuous opinion of the Jews. Atterbury.

CONTEMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from contemptuous.] With scorn; with despite; scornfully; despitefully.

I throw my name against the bruising stone,

Trampling contemptuously on thy diadem. Shakespeare.

The apostles and most eminent Christians were poor, and used contemptuously. Taylor's Holy Living.

If he governs tyrannically in youth, he will be treated contemptuously in age; and the baser his enemies, the more intolerable the affront. L'Estrange, Fab. 14. Moral.

A wise man would not speak contemptuously of a prince, though out of his dominions. Tillotson.

CONTEMPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from contemptuous.] Disposition to contempt; insolence. Dict.

TO CONTE'ND. v. n. [contendo, Latin.]

1. To strive; to struggle in opposition.

Hector's forehead spit forth blood

At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

When he reads

Thy personal venture in the rebels flight,

His wonders and his praises do contend

Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Death and nature do contend about them,

Whether they live or die. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land. Deutr. ii. 9.

2. To vie; to act in emulation.

3. It has for before the ground or cause of contention.

You sit above, and see vain men below

Contend for what you only can bestow. Dryden.

The question which our author would contend for, if he did not forget it, is what persons have a right to be obeyed. Locke.

4. Sometimes about.

He will find that many things he fiercely contended about were trivial. Decay of Piety.

5. It has with before the opponent.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,

When dying clouds contend with growing light. Sh. H. VI.

If we consider him as our maker, we cannot contend with him. Temple.

6. Sometimes against.

In ambitious strength I did

Contend against thy valour. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

TO CONTE'ND. v. a. To dispute any thing; to contest.

Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,

And on the green contend the wrestler's prize. Dryd. Aeneid.

A time of war at length will come,

When Carthage shall contend the world with Rome. Dryd.

Thus low we lie,

Shut from this day and that contended sky. Dryden.

CONTE'NDENT. n. f. [from contend.] Antagonist; opponent; champion; combatant.

In all notable changes and revolutions the contendents have been still made a prey to the third party. L'Estrange, Fab. 15.

CONTE'NDER. n. f. [from contend.] Combatant; champion.

The contenders for it, look upon it as an undeniable truth.

Locke.

Those disputes often arise in good earnest, where the two contenders do really believe the different propositions which they support. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 10.

CONTENT. adj. [contentus, Latin.]

1. Satisfied so as not to repine; easy, though not highly pleased.

Born to the spacious empire of the Nine,

One wou'd have thought she shou'd have been content,

To manage well that mighty government. Dryden.

Who is content, is happy. Locke.

A man is perfectly content with the state he is in, when he is perfectly without any uneasiness. Locke.

Foe to loud praise, and friend to learned ease,

Content with science in the vale of peace. Pope's Epistles.

5 M

2. Satisfied

2. Satisfied so as not to oppose.

Submit you to the people's voices,

Allow their officers, and be content

To suffer lawful censure.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To CONTE'NT. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To satisfy so as to stop complaint; not to offend; to appease without plenary happiness or complete gratification.

Content thyself with this much, and let this satisfy thee, that I love thee. Sidney.

It doth much content me

To hear him so inclin'd.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

If a man so temper his actions, as in some one of them he doth content every faction, the musick of praise will be fuller. Bac.

Great minds do sometimes content themselves to threaten, when they could destroy. Tillotson, Preface.

Do not content yourselves with obscure and confused ideas, where clearer are to be attained. Watts's Logick.

2. To please; to gratify.

Is the adder better than the eel,

Because his painted skin contents the eye?

Shakespeare.

CONTE'NT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Moderate happiness; such satisfaction as, though it does not fill up desire, appeases complaint.

Nought's had, all's spent,

Where our desire is got without content. Shakesp. Macbeth.

One thought content the good to be enjoy'd;

This every little accident destroy'd.

Dryden.

A wife content his even soul secur'd;

By want not shaken, nor by wealth allur'd. Smith on Philips.

2. Acquiescence; satisfaction in a thing unexamined.

Others for language all their care express,

And value books, as women men, for dress:

Their praise is still—the style is excellent;

The sense they humbly take upon content. Pope's Epistles.

3. [From contentus, contained.] That which is contained, or included in any thing.

Though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. Shakespeare.

Scarcely any thing can be certainly determined of the particular contents of any single mass of ore by mere inspection. Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

These experiments are made on the blood of healthy animals: in a lax and weak habit such a serum might afford other contents. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. The power of containing; extent; capacity.

This island had then fifteen hundred strong ships, of great content. Bacon.

It were good to know the geometrical content, figure, and situation of all the lands of a kingdom, according to natural bounds. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

5. That which is comprised in a writing. In this sense the plural only is in use.

I have a letter from her

Of such contents, as you will wonder at. Shakespeare.

I shall prove these writings not counterfeits, but authentic, and the contents true, and worthy of a divine original. Grew's Cosmol. b. iv. c. 1. f. 1.

The contents of both books come before those of the first book, in the thread of the story. Addison's Spectator, No. 267.

CONTENTA'TION. n. f. [from content.] Satisfaction; content.

I seek no better warrant than my own conscience, nor no greater pleasure than mine own contentation. Sidney.

The shield was not long after incrustured with a new rust, and is the same; a cut of which hath been engraved and exhibited, to the great contentation of the learned. Arbu. and Pope.

CONTENTED. participial adj. [from content.] Satisfied; at quiet; not repining; not demanding more; easy, though not plenarily happy.

Barbarossa, in hope by sufferance to obtain another kingdom, seemed contented with the answer. Knolles's History.

Dream not of other worlds,

Contented that thus far has been reveal'd,

Not of earth only, but of highest heav'n. Milt. Par. Lost.

If he can descry

Some nobler foe approach, to him he calls,

And begs his fate, and then contented falls. Denham.

To distant lands Vertumnus never roves,

Like you, contented with his native groves. Pope.

CONTENTION. n. f. [contentio, Latin.]

1. Strife; debate; contest; quarrel; mutual opposition.

Can we with manners ask what was the difference?

—Safely, I think; 'twas a contention in publick. Shakesp.

But avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions and strivings. Tit. iii. 9.

Can they keep themselves in a perpetual contention with their ease, their reason, and their God, and not endure a short combat with a sinful custom. Decay of Piety.

The ancients made contention the principle that reigned in the chaos at first, and then love; the one to express the divisions, and the other the union of all parties in the middle and common bond. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Emulation; endeavour to excel.

Sons and brother at a strife!

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

—No quarrel, but a sweet contention. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

3. Eagerness; zeal; ardour; vehemence of endeavour.

Your own earnestness and contention to effect what you are about, will continually suggest to you several artifices. Holder.

This is an end, which, at first view, appears worthy out utmost contention to obtain. Rogers.

CONTENTIOUS. adj. [from contend] Quarrelsome; given to debate; perverse; not peaceable.

Thou think'st much that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin. Shakespeare's King Lear.

There are certain contentious humours that are never to be pleased. L'Estrange.

Rest made them idle, idleness made them curious, and curiosity contentious. Decay of Piety.

CONTENTIOUS Jurisdiction. [In law.] A court which has a power to judge and determine differences between contending parties. The lord chief justices, and judges, have a contentious jurisdiction; but the lords of the treasury, and the commissioners of the customs, have none, being merely judges of accounts and transactions. Chambers.

CONTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from contentious.] Perversely; quarrelsomely.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, or only to justify our own, but to applaud and confirm his maturer assertions. Brown.

CONTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contentious.] Proneness to contest; perverseness; turbulence; quarrelsomeness.

Do not contentiousness and cruelty, and study of revenge, seldom fail of retaliation? Bentley's Sermons.

CONTENTLESS. adj. [from content.] Discontented; dissatisfied; uneasy.

Best states, contentless,

Have a distracted and most wretched being,

Worse than the worst, content. Shakespeare's Timon.

CONTENTMENT. n. f. [from content, the verb.]

1. Acquiescence without plenary satisfaction.

Such men's contentment must be wrought by stratagem: the usual method of fare is not for them. Hooker, b. iv. f. 8.

Submission is the only reasoning between a creature and its Maker, and contentment in his will is the best remedy we can apply to misfortunes. Temple.

Contentment, without external honour, is humility; without the pleasure of eating, temperance. Grew's Cosmol.

Some place the bliss in action, some in ease,

Those call it pleasure, and contentment these. Pope's Essays.

But now no face divine contentment wears,

'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears. Pope.

2. Gratification.

At Paris the prince spent one whole day, to give his mind some contentment in viewing of a famous city. Wotton.

CONTE'RMINOUS. adj. [conterminus, Latin.] Bordering upon; touching at the boundaries.

This insensibly conformed so many of them, as were conterminous to the colonies and garrisons, to the Roman laws. Hale's Law of England.

CONTIGUOUS. adj. [contiguus, Latin.]

1. Meeting so as to touch; bordering upon each other; not separate.

Flame doth not mingle with flame as air doth with air, or water with water, but only remaineth contiguous, as it cometh to pass betwixt confisting bodies. Bacon's Nat. History, N<sup>o</sup>. 31.

The loud misrule

Of chaos far remov'd; left fierce extremes,
Contiguus, might distemper the whole frame. Milt. Pa. Lost.

The East and West

Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham's Sophy.

Distinguish them by the diminution of the lights and shadows, joining the contiguous objects by the participation of their colours. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

When I viewed it too near, the two halves of the paper did not appear fully divided from one another, but seemed contiguous at one of their angles. Newton's Opt.

2. It has sometimes with.

Water, being contiguous with air, cooleth it, but moisteneth it not. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 865.

CONTIGUOUSLY. adv. [from contiguus.] Without any intervening spaces.

Thus disembroil'd, they take their proper place,
The next of kin contiguously embrace,
And foes are sunder'd by a larger space. Dryden's Ovid.

CO'NTINENCE. } n. f. [continentia, Latin.]

From hell continu'd reaching th' utmost orb

Of this frail world. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 1029.

Here Priam's son, Deiphobus, he found,

Whose face and limbs were one continu'd wound;

Dishonest, with lop'd arms, the youth appears,

Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears. Dryd. Æn.

Where any motion or succession is so slow, as that it keeps not pace with the ideas in our minds, there the series of a constant continued succession is lost; and we perceive it not but with certain gaps of rest between. Locke.

You know how to make yourself happy, by only continuing such a life as you have been long accustomed to lead. Pope.

CONTINUEDLY. adv. [from continued.] Without interruption; without ceasing.

By perseverance, I do not understand a continuedly uniform, equal course of obedience, and such as is not interrupted with the least act of sin. Norris.

CONTINUER. n. f. [from continue.] Having the power of perseverance.

I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

CONTINUITY. n. f. [continuitas, Latin.]

1. Connection uninterrupted; cohesion; close union.

It is certain, that in all bodies there is an appetite of union, and evitation of solution of continuity. Bacon's Nat. History.

After the great lights there must be great shadows, which we call repofes, because in reality the sight would be tired, if it were attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryd.

It wraps itself about the flame, and by its continuity hinders any air or nitre from coming. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

2. In physick.

That texture or cohesion of the parts of an animal body, upon the destruction of which there is said to be a solution of continuity. Quincy.

As in the natural body a wound or solution of continuity is worse than a corrupt humour, so in the spiritual. Bac. Essays.

The solid parts may be contracted by dissolving their continuity; for a fibre, cut through, contracts itself. Arbuthnot.

CONTINUOUS. adj. [continuus, Latin.] Joined together without the intervention of any space.

As the breadth of every ring is thus augmented, the dark intervals must be diminished, until the neighbouring rings become continuous, and are blended. Newton's Opt.

To whose dread expanse,

It principally failed by late setting out, and by some contrariety of weather at sea.
Wotton.

Their religion had more than negative contrariety to virtue.
Decay of Piety.

There is a contrariety between those things that conscience inclines to, and those that entertain the senses. South.

There is nothing more common than contrariety of opinions; nothing more obvious than that one man wholly disbelieves what another only doubts of, and a third steadfastly believes and firmly adheres to.
Locke.

2. Inconsistency; quality or position destructive of its opposite.

Making a contrariety the place of my memory, in her foulness I beheld Pamela's fairness, still looking on Mopsa, but thinking on Pamela.
Sidney.

He which will perfectly recover a sick and restore a diseased body unto health, must not endeavour so much to bring it to a state of simple contrariety, as of fit proportion in contrariety unto those evils which are to be cured.
Hooker, b. iv. f. 8.

He will be here, and yet he is not here;

How can these contrarieties agree? Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

These two interests are of that nature, that it is to be feared they cannot be divided; but they will also prove opposite, and not resting in a bare diversity, quickly rise into a contrariety.
South's Sermons.

CONTRA'RILY. adv. [from contrary.]

1. In a manner contrary.

Many of them conspire to one and the same action, and all this contrariety to the laws of specific gravity, in whatever posture the body be formed.

Davies on Ireland.

The sun may set and rise:

But we, contrariwise,

Sleep, after our short light,

One everlasting night.

Raleigh's History of the World.

CONTRARY. adj. [contrarius, Latin.]

1. Opposite; contradictory; not simply different, or not alike, but repugnant, so that one destroys or obstructs the other.

Perhaps some thing, repugnant to her kind,

By strong antipathy the soul may kill;

But what can be contrary to the mind,

Which holds all contraries in concord still.

Davies.

2. Inconsistent; disagreeing.

He that believes it, and yet lives contrary to it, knows that he hath no reason for what he does.
Tillotson, Serm. v.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, do not argue that they do not at all pursue good; but that the same thing is not good to every man alike.
Locke.

3. Adverse; in an opposite direction.

The ship was in the midst of the sea, tossed with the waves; for the wind was contrary.
Mat. xiv. 24.

CONTRARY. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A thing of opposite qualities.

No contraries hold more antipathy,

Than I and such a knave.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

He sung

Why contraries feed thunder in the cloud. Cowley's Davideis.

Honour should be concern'd in honour's cause;

That is not to be cur'd by contraries,

As bodies are, whose health is often drawn

From rankest poisons.

Southern's Oroonoko.

2. A proposition contrary to some other; a fact contrary to the allegation.

The instances brought by our author are but slender proofs of a right to civil power and dominion in the first-born, and do rather shew the contrary.
Locke.

3. On the CONTRARY. In opposition; on the other side.

He pleaded still not guilty;

The king's attorney, on the contrary,

Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions

Of diverse witnesses. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

If justice stood on the side of the single person, it ought to give good men pleasure to see that right should take place; but when, on the contrary, the commonweal of a whole nation is overborn by private interest, what good man but must lament?
Swift.

4. To the CONTRARY. To a contrary purpose; to an opposite intent.

They did it, not for want of instruction to the contrary. Still.

To Co'NTRARY. v. a. [contrarier, French.] To oppose; to thwart; to contradict.

When I came to court I was advised not to contrary the king.
Latimer.

Finding in him the force of it, he would no further contrary it, but employ all his service to medicine it.
Sidney.

CONTRAST. n. f. [contraste, Fr.] Opposition and dissimilitude of figures, by which one contributes to the visibility or effect of another.

To Co'NTRAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in opposition, so that one figure shews another to advantage.

2. To shew another figure to advantage by its colour or situation.

The figures of the groups must not be all on a side, that is, with their face and bodies all turned the same way; but must contrast each other by their several positions. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

CONTRAVALLA'TION. n. f. [from contra and vallo, Latin.]

The fortification thrown up, by the besiegers, round a city, to hinder the sallies of the garrison.

Do stand but in a forc'd affection;

For they have grudg'd us contribution. Shakesp. Jul. Caesar.

CONTRI'BUTIVE. adj. [from contribute.] That which has the power or quality of promoting any purpose in concurrence with other motives.

As the value of the promises renders them most proper incentives centives to virtue, so the manner of proposing we shall find also highly contributive to the same end. De. ay of Piety.

CONTRIBUTOR. n. f. [from contribute.] One that bears a part in some common design; one that helps forward, or exerts his endeavours to some end, in conjunction with others.

I promis'd we would be contributors,

And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoe'er. Shakespeare.

A grand contributor to our dissensions is passion. De. of Piety.

Art thou a true lover of thy country? Zealous for its religious and civil liberties? And a cheerful contributor to all those publick expences which have been thought necessary to secure them? Atterbury.

CONTRIBUTORY. adj. [from contribute.] Promoting the same end; bringing assistance to some joint design, or increase to some common stock.

TO CONTRISTATE. v. a. [contristo, Latin.] To sadden; to make sorrowful; to make melancholy.

Blackness and darkness are but privatives, and therefore have little or no activity: somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon's Natural History, No. 73.

CONTRISTATION. n. f. [from contristate.] The act of making sad; the state of being made sad; sorrow; heaviness of heart; sadness; sorrowfulness; gloominess; grief; moan; mournfulness; trouble; discontent; melancholy.

Incense and nidorous smells, such as were of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of sadness and contristation of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them. Bacon's Natural History, No. 932.

1. Bruised; much worn.

2. Worn with sorrow; harrassed with the sense of guilt; penitent. In the books of divines contrite is sorrowful for sin, from the love of God and desire of pleasing him; and attrite is sorrowful for sin, from the fear of punishment.

I Richard's body have interred now;

And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,

Than from it issa'd forced drops of blood. Shak. Henry V.

With tears

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air

Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign

Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. Pa. Lost.

The contrite sinner is restored to pardon, and, through faith in Christ, our repentance is intitled to salvation. Rogers's Sermon.

CONTRITENESS. n. f. [from contrite.] Contrition; repentance. Dict.

CONTRITION. n. f. [from contrite.]

1. The act of grinding; or rubbing to powder.

Some of those coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground; where I see not what can be justly pretended for those changes, besides the breaking of their parts into less parts by that contrition. Newton's Opt.

2. Penitence; sorrow for sin: in the strict sense, the sorrow which arises from the desire to please God, distinguished from attrition, or imperfect repentance produced by dread of hell.

What is sorrow and contrition for sin? A being grieved with the conscience of sin, not only that we have thereby incurred such danger, but also that we have so unkindly grieved and provoked so good a God. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

Fruits of more pleasing favour, from thy seed

Sown with contrition in his heart, than those

Which, his own hand manuring, all the trees

Of paradise could have produc'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Your fasting, contrition, and mortification, when the church and state appoints, and that especially in times of greater riot and luxury. Sprat's Sermons.

My future days shall be one whole contrition;

A chapel will I build with large endowment,

Where every day an hundred aged men

Shall all hold up their wither'd hands to heav'n. Dryden.

CONTRIVABLE. adj. [from contrive.] Possible to be planned by the mind; possible to be invented and adjusted.

It will hence appear how a perpetual motion may seem easily contrivable. Wilkins's Dædalus.

CONTRIVANCE. n. f. [from contrive.]

1. The act of contriving; excogitation; the thing contrived.

There is no work impossible to these contrivances, but there may be as much acted by this art as can be fancied by imagination. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

Instructed, you'll explore

Divine contrivance, and a God adore. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Scheme; plan; disposition of parts or causes.

Our bodies are made according to the most curious artifice, and orderly contrivance. Glanville's Scep. c. 7.

3. A conceit; a plot; an artifice.

Have I not manag'd my contrivance well,

To try your love, and make you doubt of mine? Dryden.

There might be a feint, a contrivance in the matter, to draw him into some secret ambush. Atterbury's Sermons.

TO CONTRIVE. v. a. [controuwer, French.]

1. To plan out; to excogitate.

One that slept in the contriving lust, and waked to do it.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

What more likely to contrive this admirable frame of the universe than infinite wisdom. Tilloson.

Our poet has always some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

2. To wear away. Out of use.

Three ages, such as mortal men contrive. Fairy Queen.

TO CONTRIVE. v. n. To form or design; to plan; to scheme; to complot.

CONTRIVER. n. f. [from contrive.] An inventor; one that plans a design; a schemer.

I, the mistress of your charms,

The close contriver of all harms,

Was never call'd to bear my part. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Epeus, who the fraud's contriver was. Denham.

Plain loyalty, not built on hope,

I leave to your contriver, Pope:

None loves his king and country better,

Yet none was ever less their debtor. Swift.

Scenes of blood and desolation, I had painted as the common effects of those destructive machines; whereof, he said, some evil genius, enemy to mankind, must have been the first contriver. Gulliv. Travels.

CONTROL. n. f. [controle, that is, contre role, French.]

1. A register or account kept by another officer, that each may be examined by the other.

2. Check; restraint.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,

Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;

And own no liberty, but where they may,

Without control, upon their fellows prey. Waller.

He shall feel a force upon himself from within, and from the control of his own principles, to engage him to do worthily. South.

If the sinner shall win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all those considerations shall be able to strike no terror into his mind, lay no restraint upon his lusts, no control upon his appetites, he is certainly too strong for the means of grace. South's Sermons.

Speak, what Phœbus has inspir'd thy soul

For common good, and speak without control. Dryd. Hom.

3. Power; authority; superintendence.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,

Are their male's subjects, and at their controls. Shakespeare.

TO CONTROL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To keep under check by a counter reckoning.

2. To govern; to restrain; to subject.

Authority to convent, to control, to punish, as far as with excommunication, whomsoever they should think worthy. Hooker, Preface.

Give me a staff of honour for mine age;

But not a sceptre to control the world. Shakesp. Tit. Andron.

Who shall control me for my works? Eclus. v. 3.

I feel my virtue struggling in my soul;

But stronger passion does its pow'r control. Dryd. Aurengz.

O, dearest Andrew, says the humble droll,

Henceforth may I obey, and thou control. Prior.

3. To overpower; to confute; as, he controlled all the evidence of his adversary.

As for the time while he was in the Tower, and the manner of his brother's death, and his own escape, he knew they were things that a very few could control. Bacon's Henry VII.

CONTROLLABLE. adj. [from control.] Subject to control; subject to command; subject to be over-ruled.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore, in its present workings, not controllable by reason. South.

CONTROLLER. n. f. [from control.] One that has the power of governing or restraining; a superintendent.

He does not calm his contumelious spirit,

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller. Shakesp. Henry VI.

The great contro'ler of our fate,

Deign'd to be man, and liv'd in low estate. Dryden.

CONTROLLERSHIP. n. f. [from controller.] The office of a controller.

CONTROLMENT. n. f. [from control.]

1. The power or act of superintending or restraining; restraint; superintendence.

They made war and peace one with another, without controlment. Davies on Ireland.

2. Opposition; resistance; confutation.

Here have we war for war, and blood for blood,

Controlment for controlment. Shakespeare's King John.

CONTROVERSIAL. adj. [from controversy.] Relating to disputes; disputatious.

It happens in controversial discourses as it does in the assaulting of towns, where, if the ground be but firm whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther enquiry of whom it is borrowed, nor whom it belongs to, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose. Locke.

CO'NTROVERSY. n. f. [controversia, Latin.]

1. Dispute; debate; agitation of contrary opinions: a dispute is commonly oral, and a controversy in writing.

How cometh it to pass that we are so rent with mutual contentions, and that the church is so much troubled? If men had been willing to learn, all these controversies might have died the very day they were first brought forth. Hooker, b. i.

Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. 1 Tim.

Wild controversy then, which long had slept,

Into the press from ruin'd cloisters leapt.

Denham.

This left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

2. A suit in law.

If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked. Deutr. xxv. 1.

3. A quarrel.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations. Jer. xxv. 31.

4. Opposition; enmity: this is an unusual sense.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside,

And stemming it with hearts of controversy. Shak. Jul. Cæs.

TO CONTROVERT. v. a. [controverto, Lat.] To debate; to ventilate in opposite books; to dispute any thing in writing.

If any person shall think fit to controvert them, he may do it very safely for me. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

CONTROVERTIBLE. adj. [from controvert] Disputable; that may be the cause of controversy.

Discouraging of matters dubious, and many controvertible truths, we cannot without arrogancy intreat a credulity, or implore any farther assent than the probability of our reasons and verity of our experiments. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

CONTROVERTIST. n. f. [from controvert.] Disputant; a man versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

Who can think himself so considerable as not to dread this mighty man of demonstration, this prince of controvertists, this great lord and possessor of first principles. Tillotson, Preface.

CONTUMACIOUS. adj. [contumax, Latin.] Obstinate; perverse; stubborn; inflexible.

He is in law said to be a contumacious person, who, on his appearance afterwards, departs the court without leave. Ayliffe.

But having shifted ev'ry form to 'scape,
Convinc'd of conquest, he resum'd his shape. Dryd. Virg.
History is all the light we have in many cases, and we receive from it a great part of the useful truths we have, with a convincing evidence. Locke.

2. To convict; to prove guilty of.
To convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds. Jude 15.

The discovery of a truth, formerly unknown, doth rather convince man of ignorance, than nature of error. Raleigh.

O seek not to convince me of a crime,
Which I can ne'er repent, nor can you pardon. Dryden.

3. To evince; to prove; to manifest; to vindicate.
Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince the honour of my mistress. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. To overpower; to surmount. This sense is now obsolete.
There are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure; their malady convinces
The great essay of art. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Knave be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinc'd or suppled them, they cannot chuse
But they must blab. Shakespeare's Othello.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I, with wine and wassell, so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To CONVUL'SE. v. a. [convulsus, Latin.] To give an irregular and involuntary motion to the parts of any body.

Follows the loosen'd, aggravated roar,

Enlarging, deepening, mingling, peal on peal,

Crush'd horrible, convulsing heaven and earth. Thomson's Summer.

CONVULSION. n. f. [convulsio, Latin.]

1. A convulsion is an involuntary contraction of the fibres and muscles, whereby the body and limbs are preternaturally distorted. Quincy.

If my hand be put into motion by a convulsion, the indifference of that operative faculty is taken away. Locke.

2. Any irregular and violent motion; tumult; commotion; disturbance.

All have been subject to some concussions, and fallen under the same convulsions of state, by dissensions or invasions. Temple.

CONVULSIVE. adj. [convulsif, French.] That which produces involuntary motion; that which gives twitches or spasms.

They are irregular and convulsive motions, or strugglings of the spirits. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Shew me the flying soul's convulsive strife,

And all the anguish of departing life. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Her colour chang'd, her face was not the same,

And hollow groans from her deep spirit came:

Her hair stood up; convulsive rage possess'd

Her trembling limbs, and heav'd her lab'ring breast. Dryd.

In silence weep,

And thy convulsive sorrows inward keep.

Prior.

CONY. n. f. [kanin, Germ. connil or connin, Fr. cuniculus, Latin.] A rabbit; an animal that burroughs in the ground.

With a short-legg'd hen,

Lemons and wine for sauce; to these a cony

Is not to be despair'd of, for our money. Ben. Johnson's Epig.

The husbandman suffers by hares and conys, which eat the corn, trees. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CONY-BOROUGH. n. f. A place where rabbits make their holes in the ground.

To Co'NYCATCH. v. n. To catch a cony, is, in the old cant of thieves, to cheat; to bite; to trick.

I have matter in my head against you, and against your conycatching rascals. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Co'NYCATCHER. n. f. A thief; a cheat; a sharper; a tricking fellow; a rascal. Now obsolete.

To COO. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a dove or pigeon.

The stock-dove only through the forest cooes,

Mournfully hoarse. Thomson's Summer, l. 610.

COOK. n. f. [coquus, Latin.] One whose profession is to dress and prepare victuals for the table.

One mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry-nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The new-born babe, by nurses overlaid,

And the cook caught within the raging fire he made. Dryden.

Their cooks could make artificial birds and fishes, in default of the real ones, and which exceeded them in the exquisiteness of the taste. Arbutnot on Coins.

COOK-MAID. n. f. [cook and maid.] A maid that dresses provisions.

A friend of mine was lately complaining to me, that his wife had turned off one of the best cook-maids in England.

Addison's Freeholder, No. 32.

COOK-ROOM. n. f. [cook and room.] A Room in which provisions are prepared for the ship's crew.

To COOK. v. a. [coquo, Latin.]

1. To prepare victuals for the table.

Who can but think, that had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes.

Decay of Piety.

2. To prepare for any purpose.

Hanging is the word, Sir; if you be ready for that; you are well cooked. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Co'OKERY. n. f. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some man's wit

Found

Found th' art of cook'ry to delight his sense:

More bodies are consum'd and kill'd with it,

Than with the sword, famine, or pestilence. Davies.

Ev'ry one to cookery pretends. King's Art of Cookery.

These are the ingredients of plants before they are prepared by cookery. Arbutnot on Aliments.

COOL. adj. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. Somewhat cold; approaching to cold.

He set his leg in a pale-full, as hot as he could well endure it, renewing it as it grew cool. Temple.

2. Not zealous; not ardent; not angry; not fond; without passion.

COOL. n. f. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But see, where Lucia, at her wonted hour,

Amid' the cool of yon high marble arch,

Enjoys the noon-day breeze. Addison's Cato.

Philander was enjoying the cool of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addison on Ancient Medals.

To COOL. v. a. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.

Snow they use in Naples instead of ice, because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor sooner. Addison on Italy.

Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe subacid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

It is but as a body slight distemper'd,

Which to its former strength may be restor'd,

With good advice and little medicine;

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. Shak. H. IV.

He will keep his jealousy to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 171.

They tell us, that had they thought they had been fighting only other people's quarrels, perhaps it might have cooled their zeal. Swift.

To COOL. v. n.

1. To grow less hot.

2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.

My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness. Sh. M. W. of W.

You never cool while you read Homer. Dryd. Fab. Preface.

I'm impatient 'till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Congreve's Old Batchelor.

CO'OLER. n. f. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular visciduity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing visciduity. Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man. Harvey on Consumptions.

Acid things were used only as coolers. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the fullage behind, and let it run off fine. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

CO'OLLY. adv. [from cool.]

1. Without heat, or sharp cold.

She in the gelid caverns, woodbine wrought,

And fresh bedew'd with ever-spouting streams,

Sits coolly calm. Thomson's Summer, l. 455.

2. Without passion.

Motives that address themselves coolly to our reason, are fittest to be employed upon reasonable creatures. Atterbury.

CO'OLNESS. n. f. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves, and other spices, naphtha and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed. Bacon's Natural History.

The toad loveth shade and coolness. Bacon's Nat. History.

Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up,

Gives a fresh coolness to the royal cup;

There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost,

Tempers hot July with December's frost. Waller.

The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade. Dryd. Virg.

2. Want of affection; disinclination.

They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again. Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Freedom from passion.

COOM. n. f.

1. Soot that gathers over an oven's mouth. Philips.

2. That matter that works out of the wheels of carriages. Bailey.

3. It is used in Scotland for the useless dust which falls from large coals. 2

VOL. I.

COOMB, or COMB. n. f. [combe, Fr. cumulus, Lat. a heap; Skinner.] A measure of corn containing four bushels. Bailey.

COOP. n. f. [kuype, Dutch.]

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.

2. A cage; a pen for animals; as poultry or sheep.

When Gracchus was slain, the same day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripudary augurations. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 11.

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop. L'Estrange.

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,

Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,

And coops from other lands her islanders. Shakesp. K. John.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravenstein, that he stirr'd not; and likewise held in strait siege the maritime part of the town. Bacon's Henry VII.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and coop'd up. L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,

Coop'd up a second time within your town!

Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryden's Æneid.

One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind;

Coop'd up, he seem'd in earth and seas confin'd. Dry. Juv.

Coop'd in a narrow isle, observing dreams

With flattering wizards. Dryden's Juv. Sat. 10.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,

Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng. Dryden's Æneid.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Locke.

They are coop'd in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant, lest, knowing more, they should believe the less in them. Locke.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again. Pope.

COOPE'E. n. f. [coupé, French.] A motion in dancing.

A CO'OPER. n. f. [from coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child.

CO'OPERAGE. n. f. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.

To COOPERATE. v. n. [con and opera, Latin.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends. Bacon, Essay 6.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity. Boyle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 2.

All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this charge, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our reach and comprehension. Rogers, Sermon 14.

COOPERA'TION. n. f. [from cooperate.] The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

COO'PERATIVE. adj. [from cooperate.] Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERA'TOR. n. f. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTA'TION. n. f. [coopto, Latin.] Adoption; assumption.

COORDINATE. adj. [con and ordinatus, Latin.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shell-fish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.

COO'RDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.] In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COO'RDINATENESS. n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COORDINA'TION. n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Howel's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

C O P

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lyfidiuſ has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state.

Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

COOT. n. f. [maer-koet, Dut. cotee, French.] A small black water-fowl, ſeen often in fens and marſhes.

A lake, the haunt

Of coots, and of the fiſhing cormorant. Dryden's Fables.

COP. n. f. [kop, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing riſing to a head. As a cop, vulgarly cock of hay; a cob-caſtle, properly cop-caſtle, a ſmall caſtle or houſe on a hill. A cob of cherryſtones for cop, a pile of ſtones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

CO'PAL. n. f. The Mexican term for a gum.

COPARCENARY. n. f. [from coparcener.] Joint ſucceſſion to any inheritance.

In the deſcent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of ſons, the chief houſe is allotted to the eldeſt daughter.

Hale's History of Common Law.

COPARCENER. n. f. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwiſe called parceners; and, in common law, are ſuch as have equal portion in the inheritance of the anceſtor.

Cowel.

This great lordſhip was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of theſe portions, the coparceners ſeverally exerciſed the ſame jurifdiction royal, which the earl marſhal and his ſons had uſed, in the whole province.

Davies on Ireland.

COPARCENY. n. f. [See COPARCENER] An equal ſhare of coparceners.

Philips's World of Words.

COPARTNER. n. f. [co and partner.] One that has a ſhare in ſome common ſtock or affair; one equally concerned; a ſharer; a partaker; a partner.

Our faithful friends,

Th' associates and copartners of our loſs. Milt. Parad. Loſt.

Shall I to him make known

As yet my change, and give him to partake

Full happineſs with me? Or rather not;

But keep the odds of knowledge in my pow'r,

Without copartner? Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. ix. l. 825.

Rather by them

I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell

Copartner in theſe regions of the world. Milt. Parad. Reg.

COPARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from copartner.] The ſtate of bearing an equal part, or poſſeſſing an equal ſhare.

In caſe the father left only daughters, and no ſons, the daughters equally ſucceeded to their father as in copartnership.

Hale's History of Common Law.

CO'PATAIN. adj. [from cope.] High raiſed; pointed. Hanmer.

Oh, fine villain! a ſilken doublet, a velvet hoſe, a ſcarlet cloke, and a copatain hat. Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

COPAYVA. n. f. [It is ſometimes written capiwi, copivi, capayva, copayva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which diſtills from a tree in Braſil. It is much uſed in diſorders of the urinary paſſages.

COPE. n. f. [See COP.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.
2. A ſacerdotal cloak, or veſtment worn in ſacred miniſtration.
3. Any thing which is ſpread over the head; as the concave of the ſkies; any archwork over a door.

All theſe things that are contained

Within this goodly cope, both moſt and leaſt,

Their being have, and daily are increaſt.

Spenser.

Over head the diſmal hiſs

Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;

And, flying, vaulted either hoſt with fire;

So, under fiery cope, together ruſh'd

Both battles main. Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. vi. l. 215.

The ſcholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is ſo knowing as his maſter. Dryd. Dufreſnoy.

To COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood, and coped over head.

Addiſon on Italy.

2. To reward; to give in return.

I and my friend

Have, by your wiſdom, been this day acquitted

Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,

Three thouſand ducats, due unto the Jew,

We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shakeſpeare.

3. To contend with; to oppoſe.

Know my name is loſt;

By treaſon's tooth bare gnawn, and canker bit;

Yet I am noble as the adverſary I come to cope. Sh. K. Lear.

To COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to ſtruggle; to ſtrive. It has with before the thing or perſon oppoſed.

In this ſenſe it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koopen, to buy, or ſome other word of the ſame import; ſo that to cope with, ſignifies to interchange blows, or any thing elſe, with another.

C O P

Let our trains

March by us, that we may peruſe the men

We ſhould have cop'd withal. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

It is likely thou wilt undertake

A thing, like death, to chide away this ſhame,

That copest with death itſelf, to 'ſcape from it. Shakeſpeare.

But Eve was Eve;

This far his over-match, who, ſelf-deceiv'd

And raſh, beforehand had no better weigh'd

The ſtrength he was to cope with, or his own. Milt. P. R.

They perfectly underſtood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

On every plain,

Hoſt cop'd with hoſt, dire was the din of war. Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itſelf firſt to eaſier ſubjects, and things near a-kin to what is already known; and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by ſlow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy ſucceſs. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindneſs or ſentiments.

Thou freſh piece

Of excellent witchcraft, who of force muſt know

The royal fool thou cop'ſt with. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

I will make him tell the tale anew;

Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when

He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shakeſp. Othello.

Thou art e'en as juſt a man,

As e'er my converſation coped withal. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

CO'PEL. See COPPEL.

CO'PESMATE. n. f. [perhaps for cuffmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the ſame cope, for houſe.] Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever ſtaid in place, ne ſpake to wight,

'Till that the fox his copeſmate he had found. Hubberd's Tale.

CO'PIER. n. f. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a tranſcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and tranſcribers. Addiſon on Ancient Coins.

2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiarist of others. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Let the faint copier, on old Tyber's ſhore,

Nor mean the taſk, each breathing buſt explore;

Line after line with painful patience trace,

This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace. Tickel.

CO'PING. n. f. [from cope.] The upper tire of maſonry which covers the wall.

All theſe were of coſtly ſtones, even from the foundation unto the coping. 1 Kings, vii. 9.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble ſhew by their graceful projections. Addiſon's Freeholder, No. 415.

CO'PIOUS. adj. [copia, Latin.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious uſe of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The tender heart is peace,

And kindly pours its copious treaſures forth

In various converſe.

Thomſon's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concife.

CO'PIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

2. At large; without brevity or concifenefs; diffuſely.

Theſe ſeveral remains have been ſo copiouſly deſcribed by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new diſcoveries on ſo beaten a ſubject. Addiſon.

CO'PIOUSNESS. n. f. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.
2. Diffuſion; exuberance of ſtile.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiouſneſs of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his buſineſs to reach the concifenefs of Demotheſenes. Dryden.

CO'PIST. n. f. [from copy.] A copyer; a tranſcriber; an imitator.

CO'PLAND. n. f. A piece of ground in which the land terminates with an acute angle. Diſt.

CO'PPED. adj. [from cop.] Riſing to a top or head.

It was broad in its baſis, and roſe copped like a ſugar-loaf. Wiſeman's Surgery.

CO'PPEL. n. f. [This word is variously ſpelt; as copel, cupel, cuple, and cuppel; but I cannot find its etymology.] An inſtrument uſed in chymiſtry in the form of a diſh, made of aſhes, well waſhed, to cleanſe them from all their ſalt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its uſe is to try and purify gold and ſilver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and expoſing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dregs, which which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppel a test. Harris.

COPPER. n. f. [koper, Dut. cuprum, Latin.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. It is not unfrequently found native in a malleable state, but in small quantities. In the state of ore it makes, according to its various admixtures, many very different appearances. The richer copper ores are found in many parts of Germany and Sweden; and we have some in England little inferior to the finest Swedish. Hill on Fossils.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra, viii. 27.

CO'PPER. n. f. A vessel made of copper; commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen vessels. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 848.

COPPER-NOSE. n. f. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Gutta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, looks red, and rise in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and, in progress of time, make copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wifman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. f. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impression: distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. f. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

This sort is like those now wrought at the copper-works.

Woodward on Fossils.

CO'PPERAS. n. f. [kopperoofe, Dut. couperoufe, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the sea-shore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. When the boiling is finished, the liquor is drawn off into coolers, where it shoots into crystals of a fine green colour. This factitious copperas, in many respects, perfectly agrees with the native green vitriol of Germany; and is used in dying hats and cloths black, and in making ink. Chambers. Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion. Brown.

CO'PPERSMITH. n. f. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmoneus, as the Grecian tale is,

Was a mad coppersmith of Elis;

Up at his forge by morning-peep.

Swift.

CO'PPERWORM. n. f. [teredo, in Latin.]

1. A little worm in ships.

2. A moth that fretteth garments.

3. A worm breeding in one's hand.

Ainsworth.

CO'PPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. f. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] Low woods cut at stated times for fuel; a place over-run with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was boarded both with high timber trees, and copses of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,

A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot. Shakespeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave staddles too thick, they will run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood.

Bacon's Henry VII.

The willows and the hazel copses green,

Shall now no more be seen,

Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays.

Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortim.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coal-mines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. f. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

C O P

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or copple-dust, by pouncing into the quicksilver. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

CO'PPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppied. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. f. [abbreviated from coppice.] Short wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The East quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,

Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd.

Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,

His eye by certain level could survey.

Dryden's Fables.

TO COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copsing wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift's Address to Parliament.

COPULA. n. f. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition; as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logick.

TO COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon, Essay 40.

TO CO'PULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Wifman's Surgery.

COPULATION. n. f. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhoneft. Hooker, b. iv. sect. 11.

CO'PULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions; as, riches and honours are temptations to pride: Caesar conquered the Gauls and the Britons: neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts's Logick.

COPY. n. f. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin. Quod cuiquam facta est copia exscribendi. Junius much inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might

From your fair mind new copies write.

Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Denham.

He slept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for the copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.

2. An individual book; one of many books; as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker, b. v. sect. 22.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference:

In bed he slept not, for my urging it;

At board he fed not, for my urging it. Shak. Com. of Err.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;

But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. f. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

CO'PY-HOLD. n. f. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court-roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence: This is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary in one point or other, almost almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it: that which is certain is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder: for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vasium, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land escheats to the lord of the manor. Cowel.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addis. Spectat.
COPY-HOLDER. n. f. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

To Co'PY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
 Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
 Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope's Epistles.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame,

To copy out their great forefathers fame. Dryd. K. Arthur.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,

Her virtues fewer swains admir'd. Swift.

To Co'PY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addison's Spectator.

To CoQUET. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tendernefs.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamesters play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

To CoQUET. v. n. To act the lover.

Phyllis, who but a month ago

Was marry'd to the Tunbridge beau,

I saw coquetting t'other night,

In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

CoQUETRY. n. f. [coqueterie, French.] Affectation of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addis. Spect.

COQUETTE. n. f. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.]

A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,

And sport and flutter in the fields of air. Pope's Ra. of Lock.

A coquette and a tinder-box are sparkled. Arbuthn. and Pope.

Co'RACLE. n. f. [cicrwgle, Welsh, probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers; made by drawing leather or oiled cloath upon a frame of wicker work.

Co'RAL. n. f. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft, while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. This external bark is of a fungous spongy texture, of a yellowish or greenish colour, and is full of an acrid juice resembling milk. It covers every part of the plant, and is easily separated from the internal or stony part by friction, while it is moist; but adheres to it very firmly, if suffered to dry on it. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller to the extremities. It grows to stones, or any other solid substances, without a root, or without any way penetrating them, as plants do the earth. It has been doubted whether coral were properly a plant or not; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. The ancients ascribed great virtues to red coral; but now it is only used internally as an astringent and absorbent, with other medicines of the same intention. We hear of white coral, of which the ancients make no mention; and what is sold under this name is a species of the madrepora, another sea-plant. There is a black coral of the same stony substance with the red, and as glossy as the blackest marble; but what is sold in the shops under that name, is a plant of a different genus, and of a tough horny texture. Hill's Materia Medica.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant: it hath no leaves: it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 780.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

He hears the crackling sound of coral woods,

And sees the secret source of subterranean floods. Dryd. Virg.

A turret was inclos'd

Within the wall, of alabaster white,

And crimson coral, for the queen of night,

Who takes in Sylvan sports her chaste delight. Dryden.

Or where's the sense, direct or moral,

That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral?

Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;

The bells she gingled.

Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. f. [corallodendron, Latin.]

It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens. Miller.

Co'RALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Latin.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes more quiet and calm. Woodward on Fossils.

Co'RALLINE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

Coralline is a sea-plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness. It is naturally very ramose or branched, and forms a bunch of filaments two or three inches long, and each of them of the thickness of a small pack-thread, and jointed. They are sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often redish, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owse, which they are forced to remove before they can come to the bed of sand. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Co'RALLOID. } adv. [κοραλλοειδης.] Resembling coral.

Co'RALLOIDAL. } Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it. Woodward on Fossils.

CORA'NT. n. f. [courant, French.] A nimble sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walsh.

Co'RBAN. n. f. [קרבת.] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were deposited. Calmet.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, French.] Crooked.

For sicker thy head very tottie is,

So thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss. Spenser's Pastorals.

Co'RBEILS. n. f. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

Co'RBEL. n. f. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

Co'RBEL. } n. f.
Co'RBEIL. }

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semi-girders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.
CORD n. f. [cort, Welsh; chorda, Latin; corde, French.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twists.

Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,

Too intricate t' unloose.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Jes. ii. 5.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,

These num'rous cords are through the body spread. Blackm.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. Isaiah, xxxiii. 20.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. f. [cord and make]. One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. f. [cord and wood]. Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

Co'RDAGE. n. f. [from cord]. A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

They fastened their ships to the ground, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage.

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping. Arbutnot on Coins.

To the cordage glued

The sailor, and the pilot to the helm. Thomson's Winter.

Co'RD'ED. adj. [from cord]. Made of ropes.

This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,

To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window. Shakespeare.

CORDELI'ER. n. f. A Franciscan frier; so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.

And who to assist but a grave cordelier.

Prior.

CORDIAL. n. f. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease

The inward languor of my wounded heart,

And then my body shall have shortly ease;

But such sweet cordials pass physicians art.

Spenser.

Comfort, like cordials after death, comes late.

Dryden.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,

The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,

Are the most pleasing objects I can find,

Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind. Dryden.

Co'RDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king

Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know

What is more cordial.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes purgatives. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among Christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial superstrucing of Christian life or renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

With looks of cordial love,

Hung over her enamour'd.

Milton.

CORDIALITY. n. f. [from cordial].

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any such respect of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

Co'RDIALLY. adv. [from cordial]. Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition, wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, no nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with and receive it. South's Sermons.

Co'RDINER. n. f. [cordonnier, French.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes. Cowel.

VOL. I.

CORDON. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet. Chambers.
CORDWAIN. n. f. [Cordovan leather, from Cordoba in Spain.] Spanish leather.

Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd

In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

CORDWA'INER. n. f. [Uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trevaux.] A shoemaker.

CORE. n. f. [cœur, French; cor, Latin.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him

In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart. Shak. Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square she raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.

Dig out the cores below the surface. Mortimer's Husbandry.

They wasteful eat,

Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core. Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees, watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

Launce the sore,

And cut the head; for, 'till the core be found,

The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground. Dryd. Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection [from corps, French, pronounced core].

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself; for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous concretions. Arbutnot on Alim.

CORIA'NDER. n. f. [coriandrum, Latin.]

It hath a fibrose annual root: the lower leaves are broad, but the upper leaves are deeply cut into five segments: the petals of the flower are unequal, and shaped like an heart: the fruit is composed of two hemispherical, and sometimes spherical seeds. The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller testiculated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom found. Miller.

Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander seed, white. Exod. xiii. 31.

CORINTH. n. f. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit commonly called currant.

The chief riches of Zant consisteth in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities. Broom's Notes on the Odyss.

CORINTHIAN Order, is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of a volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. This story is treated as a fable by Villalpandus, who imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. This order is distinguished from the rest by several characters. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian Order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.]

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus

Corticem astricium pice dimovebit

Amphoræ, fumum bibere institutæ

Consule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenæan hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the North of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I pr'ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good;

Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,

That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well. King.

Nor.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay. Pope.

CORKING-PIN. n. f. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night. Swift's Direct. to the Chambermaid.

CO'RKY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork.

Bind fast his corky arms. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CO'RMORANT. n. f. [cormoran, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
When, spight of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge. Shak.
Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Peacham on Drawing.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life

Sat like a cormorant. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 194.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt

Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden's Fables.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. f. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonic dialects; as, in an old Runick rhyme,

Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone. John xii. 25.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Sh. Coriolan.

2. Grain yet unreaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.

Why he was met even now,

Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,

Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow

In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Still a murmur runs

Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thomson's Autumn.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthreshed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a flock of corn cometh in in his season. Job, v. 26.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet

Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakesp.

The man that makes his toe,

What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do engrieve either towards rain or towards frost. Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis. Wifeman's Surgery.

He first that useful secret did explain,

That pricking corns foretold the gath'ring rain. Gay's Past.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbuth.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,

An offer'd fee from Radcliff scorns. Swift.

To CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skin-ner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

CORN-FIELD. n. f. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his lass,

That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shakesp. As you like it.

You may soon enjoy the gallant fights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's cornfields. Pope.

CORN-FLAG. n. f. [corn and flag.]

It hath a fleshy double tuberosc root: the leaves are like those of the fleur-de-lys: the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a lily, open at the top, in two lips; the upper imbricated, the under divided into five segments: the ovary becomes an oblong fruit, divided into three cells, filled with roundish seeds wrapt up in a cover. Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white. It is a proper ornament for borders.

CORN-FLOOR. n. f. The floor where corn is stored.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor. Hof. ix. 1.

CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the blue-bottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and furmitory. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 482.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them flower in June and July, and others in August. The seeds should be sown in March: they require a good soil. Mortimer's Husband.

CORN-LAND. n. f. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn-lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. f. [corn and master.] One that cultivates corn for sale.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grafter, a great sheep-master, a great timberman, a great collier, a great corn-master, and a great leadman. Bacon, Essay 35.

CORN-MARIGOLD. n. f. [from corn and marigold.]

It hath an annual root: the cup of the flower is hemispherical and scaly: the flowers are radiated; the rays being, for the most part, of a yellow flower, and the seeds are furrowed. Miller.

CORN-MILL. n. f. [corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers. Mort. Husband.

CORN-PIPE. n. f. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by flitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,

To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms. Tickel.

CORN-ROCKET. n. f. [from corn and rocket.]

The flower consists of four leaves, in form of a cross: the pointal becomes a four-cornered fruit, resembling a crested club, divided into four cells, in which are contained roundish seeds with a beak. This plant grows wild in the warm parts of France and Spain. Miller.

CORN-ROSE. n. f. See POPPY, of which it is a species.

CORN-SALLAD. n. f. [from corn and sallad.]

The leaves grow by pairs opposite on the branches, which are always divided into two parts, and appear at the top like an umbrella. The flower consists of one leaf, cut into many segments, and succeeded by one naked seed, having no down adhering to it, in which it differs from the valerian. Some sorts of it grow wild. Miller.

Corn-sallad is an herb, whose top-leaves are a sallet of themselves. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COR'NAGE. n. f. [from corne, Fr. cornu, Latin.] A tenure which obliges the landholder to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

COR'RNCHANDLER. n. f. [corn and chandler.] One that retails corn.

COR'RN CUTTER. n. f. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter, who had cleared it. Wifeman.

I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician. Spelator, N<sup>o</sup>. 307.

COR'RNEL. } n. f. [cornus, Latin.] See CORNELIAN-

CORNELIAN-TREE. } CHERRY.

The Cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represent. The fruit is good in the kitchen and conservatory. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheelwork. Mortim. Husbandry.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 485.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows

The mast and acorn, brutal food! and strows

The fruits of cornel, as they feast around. Pope's Odyssey.

COR'RNEL. } n. f. [cornus, Latin.]

CORNELIAN-CHERRY. }

The flower-cup consists of four small rigid leaves, expanded in form of a cross; from the center of which are produced many small yellowish flowers, consisting of four leaves, disposed in form of an umbrella: these flowers are succeeded by fruit, oblong or of a cylindrical form, somewhat like an olive, containing an hard stone, which is divided into two cells, each containing a single seed. The species are ten, of which the cornelian-cherry, or male cornel-tree, is very common, being propagated for its fruit, which, by many people, is preserved to make tarts: it is also used in medicine as an astringent and cooler. There is likewise an officinal preparation of this fruit, called Rob de cornus. Dogberry, or gatten-tree, is very common in hedges, and the fruit of this plant is often brought into the markets, and sold for buckthornberries; but in this fruit is but one stone, and in the buckthorn four. The sassafras sort is a native of America; and its root is much used in England to make a tea, which is greatly commended by some against violent defluxions. Most of the other sorts are brought from America, except what is commonly called the dwarf honeysuckle, which grows wild on the high mountains in the northern counties; but is with difficulty preserved in gardens. Miller.

On wildings and on strawberries they feed;

Cornel's

Cornels and brambleberries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden's Ovid.

CORNELIAN-STONE. See CARNELIAN.

CORNEMUSE. n. f. [French.] A kind of rustick flute.

CO'RNEOUS. adj. [corneus, Latin.] Horny; of a substance resembling horn.

Such as have corneous or horny eyes, as lobsters, and crustaceous animals, are generally dimsighted. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The various submarine shrubs are of a corneous or ligneous constitution, consisting chiefly of a fibrous matter. Woodward.

CORNER. n. f. [cornel, Welsh; cornier, French.]

1. An angle; a place inclosed by two walls or lines, which would intersect each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.

2. A secret or remote place.

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience, Deserves a corner. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house-top, than with a brawling woman and in a wide house. Proverbs, xxv. 24.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. Aets, xxvi. 26.

All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection. Davies.

Those vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the soul. Addis.
Your active search

Leaves no cold wintry corner unexplor'd. Thomson's Spring.

3. The extremities; the utmost limit: thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day,
Behold this maid, all corners else o' th' earth
Let liberty make use of. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I turn'd, and try'd each corner of my bed,
To find if sleep were there; but sleep was lost. Dryden.

CORNER-STONE. n. f. [corner and stone.] The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corner-stone? Shakesp.
A mason was fitting a corner-stone. Howel's Vocal Forest.

CORNER-TEETH of a Horse, are the four teeth which are placed between the middling teeth and the tusches; and are two above and two below, on each side of the jaw, which shoot forth when the horse is four years and a half old. Farrier's Dict.

CO'RNERSWISE. adv. [corner and wise.] Diagonally; with the corner in front.

CO'RNET. n. f. [cornette, French.]

1. A musical instrument blown with the mouth: used anciently in war, probably in the cavalry.

Israel played before the Lord on psalteries and on timbrels, and on cornets. 2 Sa. vi. 5.

Other wind instruments require a forcible breath; as trumpets, cornets, and hunters horns. Bacon's Natural History.

Cornets and trumpets cannot reach his ear,
Under an actor's nose, he's never near. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A company or troop of horse; perhaps as many as had a cornet belonging to them. This sense is now disused.

These noblemen were appointed, with some cornets of horse and bands of foot, to put themselves beyond the hill where the rebels were encamped. Bacon.

Seventy great horses lay dead in the field, and one cornet was taken. Hayward.

They discerned a body of five cornets of horse very full, standing in very good order to receive them. Clarendon.

3. The officer that bears the standard of a troop.

4. CORNET of a Horse, is the lowest part of his pastern that runs round the coffin, and is distinguished by the hair that joins and covers the upper part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

5. A scarf anciently worn by doctors. Dict.

6. A head-dress. Dict.

7. A CORNET of Paper, is described by Skinner to be a cap of paper, made by retailers for small wares.

CO'RNETTER. n. f. [from cornet.] A blower of the cornet.

So great was the rabble of trumpetters, cornetters, and other musicians, that even Claudius himself might have heard them. Hakewill on Providence.

CO'RNICE. n. f. [corniche, French.] The highest projection of a wall or column.

The cornice of the Palazzo Farnese, which makes so beautiful an effect below, when viewed more nearly, will be found not to have its just measures. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The walls were massy brags, the cornice high
Blue metals crown'd, in colours of the sky. Pope's Odyssey.

CORNICE Ring. [In gunnery.] The next ring from the muzzle backwards. Chambers.

CORNICLE. n. f. [from cornu, Latin.] A little horn.

There will be found, on either side, two black filaments, or membranous strings, which extend unto the long and shorter cornicle, upon protrusion. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

CORNICULATE. adj. [from cornu, Lat.] A term in botany.

Corniculate plants are such as produce many distinct and horned pods; and corniculate flowers are such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn. Chamb.

CORNIFICK. adj. [from cornu and facio, Latin.] Productive of horns; making horns. Dict.

C O R

CORNI'GEROUS. adj. [corniger, Latin.] Horned; having horns.

Nature, in other cornigerous animals, hath placed the horns higher, and reclining; as in bucks. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CORNUCOPIÆ. n. f. [Lat.] The horn of plenty; a horn topped with fruits and flowers in the hands of a goddess.

To CORNU'TE. v. a. [cornutus, Latin.] To bestow horns; to cuckold.

CORNU'TED. adj. [cornutus, Latin.] Grafted with horns; horned; cuckolded.

CORNU'TO. n. f. [from cornutus, Latin.] A man horned; a cuckold.

The peaking cornuto her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

CO'RNRY. adj. [from cornu, horn, Latin.]

1. Strong or hard like horn; horny.

Up stood the corny reed,

Embattel'd in her field. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

2. [from corn.] Producing grain or corn.

Tell me why the ant,

'Midst Summer's plenty, thinks of Winter's want,

By constant journeys, careful to prepare

Her stores; and bringing home the corny ear. Prior.

CO'ROLLARY. n. f. [corollarium, Lat. from corolla; finis coronat opus; or from corollair, Fr. a surplus.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it. Government of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself. Dryden's Fab. Preface.

2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary,

Rather than want. Shakespeare's Tempest.

CORONA. n. f. [Latin.] A large flat member of the cornice; so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip. Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping; the modillions or dentelli, make a noble thew by their graceful projections. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 415.

CO'RONAL. n. f. [corona, Latin.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Bacchus with a coronal,
And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine. Spenser.

CO'RONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty-five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal future. Wise.

CO'RONARY. adj. [coronarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots upon the crown. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley's Sermons.

CORONA'TION. n. f. [from corona, Latin.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sidney, b. ii.

Willingly I came to Denmark,
To shew my duty in your coronation. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A cough, sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown
Of Sh——'s coronation through the town. Dryden's Macfl.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancy'd scene,
See coronations rise on ev'ry green. Pope.

CO'RONER. n. f. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to enquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury of twelve persons is impannelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him fit o' my uncle; for he's in the third degree of drink; he's drowned. Shakesp.

CO'RONET. n. f. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.] An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl. Sidney.

In his livery
Walk'd crowns and coronets, realms and islands were
As plates dropt from his pocket. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

All the rest are countesses.

—— Their coronets say so. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Under

Under a cor net his flowing hair,
In curls, on either cheek play'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt. Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
And garters, stars, and coronets appear. Pope's Ra. of Lock.
CORPORAL. n. f. [corrupted from caporal, French.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corp'ral whisper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tip'd, would set me clear. Gay.
CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him. Harris.

CORPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.
To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied. Shak. Hen. V.
Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding. Raleigh.

They enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts, which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as a corporeal being; but otherwise corporal. Corporeal is having a body; corporal relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath, into the wind. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. Milt. Par. Lost.

CORPORALITY. n. f. [from corporal.] The quality of being embodied.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all other, the most subtle and pure. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

CORPORALLY. adv. [from corporal.] Bodily.

The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus. Brown.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Latin.] United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, defacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled. Spenser on Ireland.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall. Shakespeare's Timon.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons. Swift.

CORPORATENESS. n. f. [from corporate.] The state of a body corporate; a community. Dict.

CORPORATION. n. f. [from corpus, Latin.]

A corporation is a body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir. Cowel.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do; in regard of their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society or fellowship with men. Hooker, b. i. sect. 4.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;
Ten thousand men she doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make. Davies.

CORPORATURE. n. f. [from corpus, Latin.] The state of a being embodied. Dict.

CORPOREAL. adj. [corporeus, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That to corporeal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal. South's Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. Tillotson.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal prison freed. Dryden's Fables.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye

On the young gnat, or new-engender'd fly. Prior.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Aimsbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one. Swift.

CORPOREITY. n. f. [from corporeus, Latin.] Materiality; the quality of being embodied; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity which supposeth weight or gravity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects and this lower of corporeity. Glanville's Scept. c. iv.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure. Stillingfleet.

CORPORIFICATION. n. f. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

To CORPORIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To embody; to inspissate into body.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

CORPS. } n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

CORPSE. }

1. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this man, this vast unhide-bound corps. Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That scorns his brittle corps, and seems ashamed
He's not all spirit. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend greet

My poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown. Shakesp.
There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,

And violent death in thousand shapes display'd. Dryd. Fables
See where the corps of thy dead son approaches. Addison.

The corpse was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body. Addison's Guardian, No. 99.

3. A body of forces.

CORPULENCE. } n. f. [corpulentia, Latin.]

CORPULENCY. }

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdensome corpulence my love had grown. Dome.

It is but one species of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Spiffitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tail, the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray on the Creation.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.] Flethy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CORPUSCLE. n. f. [corpusculum, Lat.] A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes. Newton's Opt.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies? Watts's Logick.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from corpusculum, Lat.] Relating

CORPUSCULARIAN. } to bodies; comprising bodies. It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical. Boyle.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscularians talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks. Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Bentley's Serm.

CORRACLE. See CORRICLE.

To CORRADE. v. a. [corrado, Latin.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIATION. n. f. [con and radius, Lat.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradation, and conjunction of beams. Bacon's Natural History, No. 277.

To CORRECT. v. a. [corrigo correctum, Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of sinning. Tayl.

After

After he has once been corrected for a lie, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him. Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them, when they do amiss. Locke on Education.

2. To amend; to take away faults, in writings or life.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Preface.

Correcting nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern; to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

As in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink: its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,

Which he presumes the most correct of his. Dryd. Aur. Prolog.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense and language is complete. Felton on the Classics.

CORRECTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,

Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shakesp. Rich. II.

An offensive wife,

That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,

As he is striking, holds his infant up,

And hangs-resolv'd correction in the arm

That was uprear'd to execution. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue. Watts.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, make take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery. Brown.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she always gave good counsel, but often too gentle correction. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make courts hot, ambitious, wholesome, do not take

A dram of country's dulness; do not add

Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Denne.

CORRECTIONER. n. f. [from correction.] One that has been in the house of correction; a jail-bird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare.

I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished correctioner. Shakesp. Henry IV.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral; corrective of the bilious alcali.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CORRECTIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food. Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow. South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment, which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; appositely; exactly; without faults.

VOL. I.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenes and principles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools. Locke on Education.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,

Correctly cold, and regularly low. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

CORRECTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air and posture, and the correctness of design in this statue, are inexpressible. Addison on Italy.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,

When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war. Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness. Swift.

CORRECTOR. n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin? How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion. Sprat's Sermons.

With all his faults he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the lixivial salts prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes, whereby they sometimes occasion intolerable gripings; and as spices and carminative seeds also assist in the easier operation of some catharticks, by dissipating collections of wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector which destroys or diminishes a quality that it could not otherwise be dispensed with: thus turpentine is a corrector of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture; and thus rectified spirit of wine breaks off the points of some acids, so as to make them become safe and good remedies, which before were destructive. Quincy.

TO CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate. South's Sermons.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another. South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other. South's Sermons.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION. n. f. [corripio correptum, Latin.] Objurgation; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must needs be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction and backbiting into admonition and fraternal correction. Government of the Tongue, sect. 6.

TO CORRESPOND. v. n. [con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time. Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. } n. f. [from correspond.]

CORRESPONDENCY. }

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the others more perfect direction. Hooker, b. i.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations keep the same to one another. Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms. King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence

With the enemy, and thus they would betray us. Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 116.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state. Bacon, Essay 17.

CORRESPONDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep. Hooker.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind,

Five correspondent are to earth assign'd. Dryden's Ovid.

CORRESPONDENT. n. f. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad. Denham's Dedication.

CORRESPONSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,

And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,

Sperre up the sons of Troy. Shakes. Troilus and Cressida.

CORRIDOR. n. f. [French.]

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long isle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other. Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost intirely ruined. Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Latin.]

1. That which may be altered or amended.

2. He who is a proper object of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language. Howel's Vocal Forest.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will. Shakespeare's Othello.

CORRIVAL. n. f. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other. Spenser on Ireland.

He that doth redeem her thence, might wear

Without corrival all her dignities. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

CORRIVALRY. n. f. [from corrival.] Competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits, and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 961.

TO CORROBORATE. v. a. [con and roboro, Latin.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom. Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it. Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgment. Wotton.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby. Watts.

CORROBORATION. n. f. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better corroboracion of the marriage. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORROBORATIVE. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried. Wifeman's Surgery.

TO CORRODE. v. a. [corrodo, Latin.] To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statefmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode

The bad with bad, a spider with a toad;

For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will. Donne.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrease, is wont to reduce it to a green blue solution. Boyle on Colours.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Hannibal the Pyreneans past,

And steepy Alps, the mounds that nature cast,

And with corroding juices, as he went,

A passage through the living rock he rent. Dryd. Juvenal.

Fishes, which neither chew their meat nor grind it in their stomachs, do, by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus. Ray on the Creation.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind. Arbuth.

Through the heart,

Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,

'Tis then delightful misery no more,

But agony unmixt, incessant gall,

Corroding every thought, and blasting all

Love's paradise. Thomson's Spring; l. 1075.

CORRODENT. adj. [from corrode.] Having the power of corroding or wasting any thing away.

CORRODIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed or corroded.

Metals, although corrodible by waters, yet will not suffer a liquation from the powerfulest heat communicable unto that element. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

CORRODY. n. f. [from corrodo, Latin.] A defalcation from an allowance or salary for some other than the original purpose.

In those days even noble persons, and other meaner men, ordered corrodies and pensions to their chaplains and servants out of churches. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CORROSIBILITY. n. f. [from corrosibile.] The quality of being corrosible; possibility to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORROSIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORROSIBLENESS. n. f. [from corrosibile.] Susceptibility of corrosion. Dict.

CORROSION. n. f. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid, or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstrua here employed, have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved; so when the more-solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Quincy.

If there be any medicine that purgeth, and hath neither of the first two manifest qualities, it is to be held suspected as a kind of poison; for that it worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature. Bacon's Nat. History.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Woodw.

CORROSIVE. adj. [from corrodo, Latin.] It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

Gold, after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cosmol. b. i. c. 2. f. 12.

The sacred sons of vengeance, on whose course

Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year. Thomson's Spring.

2. Having the quality to fret or vex.

If the maintenance of ceremonies be a corrosive to such as oppugn them, undoubtedly to such as maintain them it can be no great pleasure, when they behold that which they reverence is oppugned. Hooker, b. iv. sect. 10.

CORROSIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the quality of wasting any thing away, as the flesh of an ulcer.

He meant his corrosives to apply,

And with strict diet tame his stubborn malady. Fairy Queen.

2. That which has the power of fretting, or of giving pain.

Such speeches favour not of God in him that useth them, and and unto virtuously disposed minds they are grievous corrosives.

Hooker, b. v. sect. 33.

Away; though parting be a fretful corrosive,

It is applied to a deathful wound. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. i.

Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,

For things that are not to be remedied. Shakesp. Henry VI.

CORRO'SIVELY. adv. [from corrosive.]

1. Like a corrosive.

At first it tasted somewhat corrosively. Boyle on Saltpetre.

2. With the power of corrosion.

CORRO'SIVENESS. n. f. [from corrosive.] The quality of corroding or eating away; acrimony.

We do infuse, to what he meant for meat,

Corrosiveness, or intense cold or heat. Donne.

Saltpetre betrays upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness at all, but coldness, mixt with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness. Boyle.

CORRUGANT. adj. [from corrugate.] Having the power of contracting into wrinkles.

TO CORRUGATE. v. a. [corrugo, Latin.] To wrinkle or purse up; as the skin is drawn into wrinkles by cold, or any other cause. Quincy.

The cramp cometh of contraction of sinews: it cometh either by cold or dryness; for cold and dryness do both of them contract and corrugate. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 964.

CORRUGATION. n. f. [from corrugate.] Contraction into wrinkles.

The pain of the solid parts is the corrugation or violent agitation of fibres, when the spirits are irritated by sharp humours. Floyer on the Humours.

TO CORRUPT. v. a. [corrumpo corruptus, Latin.]

1. To turn from a sound to a putrescent state; to infect.

2. To deprave; to destroy integrity; to vitiate; to bribe.

I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. 2 Cor. xi. 3.

Even what things they naturally know, in those very things, as hearts void of reason, they corrupted themselves. Jude, v. 10.

Evil communications corrupt good manners. 1 Cor. xv. 33.

All that have miscarried

By underhand, corrupted, foul injustice. Shak. Richard III.

I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

But stay, I smell a man of middle earth;

With tryal fire touch me his finger-end;

If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,

And turn him to no pain; but if he start,

It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shak. M. W. of Windsor.

Language being the conduit whereby men convey their knowledge, he that makes an ill use of it, though he does not corrupt the fountains of knowledge, which are in things, yet he stops the pipes. Locke.

Hear the black trumpet through the world proclaim,

That not to be corrupted is the shame. Pope.

3. To spoil; to do mischief.

TO CORRUPT. v. n. To become putrid; to grow rotten; to putrefy.

The aptness or propension of air or water to corrupt or putrefy, no doubt, is to be found before it break forth into manifest effects of diseases, blasting, or the like. Bacon.

CORRUPT. adj. [from corrupt.] Vitious; tainted with wickedness; without integrity.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying. Eph. iv. 29.

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire. Sh. M. W. of Windsor.

These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,

Than twenty filky ducking observants. Shakesp. King Lear.

Some, who have been corrupt in their morals, have yet been infinitely solicitous to have their children piously brought up. South's Sermons.

CORRUPTER. n. f. [from corrupt.] He that taints or vitiates; he that lessens purity or integrity.

What is here?

The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus;

All turn'd to heresy? Away, away,

Corrupters of my faith! Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

From the vanity of the Greeks, the corrupters of all truth, who, without all ground of certainty, vaunt their antiquity, came the error first of all. Raleigh's History of the World, b. i.

Those great corrupters of Christianity, and indeed of natural religion, the Jesuits. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 6.

CORRUPTIBILITY. n. f. [from corruptible.] Possibility to be corrupted.

CORRUPTIBLE. adj. [from corrupt.]

1. Susceptible of destruction by natural decay, or without violence.

Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live, were it not that they are joined with his body, which is incorruptible, and that his is in ours as a cause of immortality. Hooker.

It is a devouring corruption of the essential mixture, which consisting chiefly of an oily moisture, is corruptible through dissipation. Harvey on Consumptions.

The several parts of which the world consists, being in their nature corruptible, it is more than probable, that, in an infinite duration, this frame of things would long since have been dissolved. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Susceptible of corruption; possible to be tainted or vitiated.

CORRUPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from corruptible.] Susceptibility of corruption.

CORRUPTIBLY. adv. [from corruptible.] In such a manner as to be corrupted, or vitiated.

It is too late; the life of all his blood

Is touch'd corruptibly. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CORRUPTION. n. f. [corruptio, Lat.]

1. The principle by which bodies tend to the separation of their parts.

2. Wickedness; perversion of principles; loss of integrity.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, which makes us averse to them, are so abstracted from ideas of sense, that they seldom get an opportunity for descriptions and images. Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.

Amidst corruption, luxury and rage,

Still leave some ancient virtue's to our age. Pope.

3. Putrescence.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,

Careful this fatal error to prevent,

And keep the waters from corruption free,

Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea. Blackmore.

4. Matter or pus in a sore.

5. The means by which any thing is vitiated; depravation.

After my death I wish no other herald,

No other speaker of my living actions,

To keep mine honour from corruption,

But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shak. Hen. VIII.

The region hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages, received new and differing names. Raleigh's History.

All those four kinds of corruption are very common in their language; for which reasons the Greek tongue is become much altered. Brerewood on Languages.

6. [In law.] An infection growing to a man attainted of felony or treason, and to his issue: for as he loseth all to the prince, or other lord of the fee, so his issue cannot be heir to him, or to any other ancestor, of whom they might have claimed by him; and if he were noble, or a gentleman, he and his children are made ignoble and ungentle, in respect of the father. Cowel.

CORRUPTIVE. adj. [from corrupt.] Having the quality of tainting or vitiating.

Not resembling themselves according to feminal condition, yet carrying a settled habitude unto the corruptive originals.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

It should be endued with an acid ferment, or some corruptive quality, for so speedy a dissolution of the meat and preparation of the chyle. Ray on the Creation.

CORRUPTLESS. adj. [from corrupt.] Insusceptible of corruption; undecaying.

All around

The borders, with corruptless myrrh are crown'd. Dryden.

CORRUPTLY. adv. [from corrupt.]

1. With corruption; with taint; with vice; without integrity.

O, that estates, degrees, and offices,

Were not deriv'd corruptly, that clear honour

Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer. Shakespeare.

We have dealt very corruptly against thee, and have not kept the commandments. Neh. i. 7.

2. Vitiously; improperly; contrary to purity.

We have corruptly contracted most names, both of men and places. Camden's Remains.

CORRUPTNESS. n. f. [from corrupt.] The quality of corruption; putrescence; vice.

CORSAIR. n. f. [French.] A pirate; one who professes to seize merchants.

CORSE. n. f. [corps, French]

1. A body.

For he was strong, and of so mighty corse,

As ever wielded spear in warlike hand Spenser, can. iii.

2. A dead body; a carcase: a poetical word.

That from her body, full of filthy sin,

He rest her hateful head, without remorse;

A stream of coal-black blood forth gushed from her corse.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 1. Stan. 24.

Set down the corse; or, by saint Paul,

I'll make a corse of him that disobey's. Shakesp. Richard III.

What may this mean?

That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,

Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,

Making night hideous? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Here lay him down, my friends,

Full in my sight, that I may view at leisure

The bloody corse, and count those glorious wounds. Addison.

You heard the groans,

Heard nightly plung'd, amid' the sudden waves,

The frequent corse. Thomson's Summer, l. 1035.

CORSELET.

CO'RSELET. n. f. [corselet, French.] A light armour for the forepart of the body.

Some shirts of maille, some coats of plate put on,
Some don'd a cuirace, some a corselet bright. Fairfax, b. i.
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corselets, and their thinnest parts explore. Dryd. Fab.
But heroes, who o'ercome or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which, in battle's heat,
Against their very corselets beat. Prior.

CORTICAL. adj. [cortex, bark, Lat.] Barky; belonging to the outer part; belonging to the rind; outward.

Their last extremities form a little gland, (all these little glands together make the cortical part of the brain) terminating in two little vessels. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

CORTICATED. adj. [from corticatus, Lat.] Resembling the bark of a tree.

This animal is a kind of lizard, a quadruped corticated and depilous; that is, without wool, fur, or hair. Brown.

CORTICOSE. adj. [from corticofus, Lat.] Full of bark. Dict.

CORVE'TTO. n. f. The curvet. See CURVET.

You must draw the horse in his career with his manage, and turn, doing the corvetto and leaping. Peacham on Drawing.

CORUSCANT. adj. [corusco, Latin.] Glittering by flashes; flashing.

CORUSCA'TION. n. f. [coruscatio, Latin.] Flash; quick vibration of light.

We see that lightnings and coruscations, which are near at hand, yield no sound. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 14.

We may learn that sulphureous steams abound in the bowels of the earth, and ferment with minerals, and sometimes take fire with a sudden coruscation and explosion. Newton's Opt.

How heat and moisture mingle in a mass,
Or belch in thunder, or in lightning blaze;
Why nimble coruscations strike the eye,

And bold tornado's bluster in the sky. Garth's Dispensatory.

CORYMBIATED. adj. [corymbus, Latin.] Garnished with branches of berries. Dict.

CORYMBIFEROUS. adv. [from corymbus and fero, Lat.] Bearing fruit or berries in bunches.

Corymbiferous plants are distinguished into such as have a radiate flower, as the sun-flower; and such as have a naked flower, as the hemp-agrimony, and mugwort: to which are added those a-kin hereunto, such as scabious, teasel, thistle, and the like. Quincy.

CORYMBUS. n. f. [Latin.]

It in general signifies the top of any thing; but amongst the ancient botanists it was used to express the bunches or clusters of berries of ivy, or the like: amongst modern botanists it is used for a compounded discous flower, whose seeds are not pappous, or do not fly away in down; such are the flowers of daisies, and common marygold; and therefore Mr. Ray makes one genus of plants to be such as have a compound discous flower, without any downy wings to carry off their seeds. Quincy.

COSCI'NOMANCY. n. f. [from κόσμιον, a sieve, and μαντεία, divination.] The art of divination by means of a sieve. A very ancient practice mentioned by Theocritus, and still used in some parts of England, to find out persons unknown. Chambers.

COSE'CANT. n. f. [In geometry.] The secant of an arch, which is the complement of another to ninety degrees. Harris.

CO'SHERING. n. f. [Irish.]

Cosherings were visitations and progresses made by the lord and his followers among his tenants; wherein he did eat them (as the English proverb is) out of house and home. Davies.

CO'SIER. n. f. [from couser, old Fr. to sew.] A butcher. Hammer.

Do you make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your cosier catches, without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

CO'SINE. n. f. [In geometry.] The right sine of an arch, which is the complement of another to ninety degrees. Harris.

COSME'TICK. adj. [κοσμητικός.] Having the power of improving beauty; beautifying.

No better cosmeticks than a severe temperance and purity, modesty and humility, a gracious temper and calmness of spirit; no true beauty without the signatures of these graces in the very countenance. Ray on the Creation.

First, rob'd in white, the nymph intent adores,

With head uncover'd, the cosmetick pow'rs. Pope.

CO'SMICAL. adj. [κόσμος.]

1. Relating to the world.

2. Rising or setting with the sun; not acronychal.

The cosmical ascension of a star we term that, when it ariseth together with the sun, or in the same degree of the ecliptick wherein the sun abideth. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

CO'SMICALLY. adv. [from cosmical.] With the sun; not acronychally.

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emersion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.

CO'SMOGONY. n. f. [κόσμος, and γονή.] The rise or birth of the world; the creation.

COSMO'GRAPHER. n. f. [κόσμος and γράφω.] One who writes a description of the world; distinct from geographer, who describes the situation of particular countries.

Thus the antient cosmographers do place the division of the East and Western hemisphere; that is, the first term of longitude in the Canary or Fortunate Islands, conceiving these parts the extremest habitations westward. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CO-MOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from cosmography.] Relating to the general description of the world.

COSMOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from cosmographical.] In a manner relating to the science by which the structure of the world is discovered and described.

This it doth more plainly upon the terrella, or spherical magnet, cosmographically set out with circles of the globe.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 7.

COSMO'GRAPHY. n. f. [κόσμος and γραφία.] The science of the general system or affections of the world, distinct from geography, which delivers the situation and boundaries of particular countries.

Here it might see the world without travel; it being a lesser scheme of the creation, nature contracted; a little cosmography, or map of the universe. South's Sermons.

COSMOPO'LITAN. } n. f. [κόσμος and πολίτης.] A citizen of the COSMOPO'LITE. } world; one who is at home in every place.

If thou wilt bewail my woful teen;

I shall thee give yond cosset for thy pain. Spenser's Past.

COST. n. f. [koft, Dutch.] As this word is found in the remotest Teutonick dialects, even in the islandick, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin costo; though it is not unlikely that the French coster comes from the Latin.]

1. The price of any thing.

2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears

The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders. Shakespeare.

Let foreign princes vainly boast

The rude effects of pride and cost

Of vaster fabricks, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay. Waller.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy. Sidney, b. ii.

I shall never hold that man my friend,

Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,

To ransom home revolted Mortimer. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift? 2 Sa. xix. 42.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!

Put poor nature to such cost?

O! 'twill undo our common mother,

To be at charge of such another. Crashaw.

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which men's mouths are open against the church, but their hands shut towards it. South's Sermons.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,

Should win his supper at our common cost. Dryden's Fables.

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent: what were his other visible costs I know not; what his latent, is variously conjectured. Swift.

4. Loss; fine; detriment.

What they had fondly wished, proved afterwards to their costs over true. Knolles's History of the Turks.

TO COST. v. n. pret. cost; particip. cost. [coster, French.] To be bought for; to be had at a price.

The dagger and poison are always in readiness; but to bring the action to extremity, and then recover all, will require the art of a writer, and cost him many a pang. Dryden.

CO'STAL. adj. [costa, Lat. a rib.] Belonging to the ribs.

Hereby are excluded all cetaceous and cartilaginous fishes, many pectinal, whose ribs are rectilineal; and many costal, which have their ribs embowed. Brown's Vulgar Err.

1. A head.

Take him over the costard with the belt of thy sword.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.

Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and, if our greedy patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard mongers, grafiars, or sell ale Burton on Melancholy.

COS'TIVE. adj. [constipatus, Lat. constipe, French.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excretions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed, the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white. Brown.

While faster than his costive brains indites,

Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;

His case appears to me like honest Teague's,

When he was run away with by his legs. Prior.

2. Close; unpermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, 'till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the air and heavenly influences. Mortimer's Englandry.

COSTIVENESS.

Co'sTIVENESS. n. f. [from co'stive.] The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed.

Co'stiveness disperses malign putrid fumes out of the guts and mesentery into all parts of the body, occasioning head-aches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction. Harvey.

Co'stiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil. Locke on Education, sect. 23.

Co'sTLINESS. n. f. [from co'stly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious co'stline's, yet with cleanly sufficiency it entertained me. Sidney, b. i.

Nor have the frugaller sons of fortune any reason to object the co'stline's; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures. Glanville's Scept. Preface.

Co'sTLY. adj. [from co'st.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Co'stly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shake'sp. Hamlet.

Leave for a while thy co'stly country-seat;
And to be great indeed, forget
The nauseous pleasures of the great. Dryden.

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most co'stly piece of work on the face of the earth, when completed. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

He is here speaking of Paradise, which he represents as a most charming and delightful place; abounding with things not only useful and convenient, but even the most rare and valuable, the most co'stly and desirable. Woodw. Nat. History.

Co'sTMARY. n. f. [co'stus, Latin.] An herb whose flowers are naked, and of a yellow colour, growing in umbels on the top of the stalks: the leaves are intire, and crenated about the edges. Miller.

COAT. } COT. n. f. [cot, Sax. cwt, Welsh.] A small house; a cottage; a hut; a mean habitation.

What that usage meant,

Which in her cot she daily practised. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 6.

Besides his cot, his flocks, and bounds of feed,

Are now on sale; and at our sheep cot now,

By reason of his absence, there is nothing

That you will feed on. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Hezekiah made himself stalls for all manner of beasts, and cots for flocks. 2 Chron. xxxii. 28.

My feeble goats,

With pains I drive from their forsaken cotes. Dryden's Virgil.

A stately temple shoots within the skies:

The crotchets of their cot in columns rise;

The pavement, polish'd marble they behold;

The gates with sculpture grac'd, the spires and tiles of gold. Dryden's Baucis and Philemon.

As Jove vouchsaf'd on Ida's top, 'tis said,

At poor Philemon's cot to take a bed. Fenton.

COT. n. f. An abridgment of cotquean.

Co's'NGENT. n. f. [In geometry.] The tangent of an arch which is the complement of another to ninety degrees. Harris.

To COTE. v. a. This word, which I have found only in Chapman, seems to signify the same as To leave behind, To over pass.

Words her worth had prov'd with deeds,

Had more ground been allow'd the race, and coted far his steeds. Chapman's Iliads.

COTE'MPORARY. adj. [con and tempus, Latin.] Living at the same time; coetaneous; contemporary.

What would not, to a rational man, cotemporary with the first voucher, have appeared probable, is now used as certain, because several have since, from him, said it one after another. Locke.

Co'TLAND. n. f. [cot and land.] Land appendant to a cottage.

Co'TQUEAN. n. f. [probably from coquin, French.] A man who busies himself with women's affairs.

Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica;

Spare not for cot.——

——Go, go, you cotquean, go;

Get you to bed. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

A statewoman is as ridiculous a creature as a cotquean: each of the sexes should keep within its particular bounds. Addison's Freeholder, No. 38.

You have given us a lively picture of husbands hen-peck'd; but you have never touched upon one of the quite different character, and who goes by the name of cotquean. Add. Spect.

Co'TTAGE. n. f. [from cot.] A hut; a mean habitation; a cot; a little house.

The sea-coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks. Zeph. ii. 6.

VOL. I.

They were right glad to take some corner of a poor cottage; and there to serve God upon their knees. Hooker, b. iv. f. 2.

The self-same sun that shines upon his court,

Hides not his visage from our cottage, but

Looks on both alike.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Let the women of noble birth and great fortunes nurse their children, look to the affairs of the house, visit poor cottages, and relieve their necessities. Taylor's Holy Living.

It is difficult for a peasant, bred up in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the unseen splendors of a court. South's Sermons.

Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,

And here, unenvied, rural dainties taste. Pope's Odyssey.

Co'TTAGER. n. f. [from cottage.]

1. One who lives in a hut or cottage.

Let us from our farms,

Call forth our cottagers to arms.

Swift.

The most ignorant Irish cottager will not sell his cow for a groat. Swift's Address to Parliament.

2. A cottager, in law, is one that lives on the common, without paying rent, and without any land of his own.

The husbandmen and plowmen be but as their work-folks and labourers; or else mere cottagers, which are but housed beggars. Bacon's Henry VII.

The yeomenry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon's Henry VII.

Co'TTIER. n. f. [from cot.] One who inhabits a cot. Dict.

Co'TTON. n. f. [named, according to Skinner, from the down that adheres to the mala cotonea, or quince, called by the Italians cotogni; whence cottone, Ital. cotton, French.] The down of the cotton-tree.

The pin ought to be as thick as a rowling-pin, and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive. Wiseman.

Co'TTON. n. f. A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, cut into several segments almost to the bottom, and is of the expanded bell shape: from the center rises a pyramidal hollow tube, adorned and loaded with chives: from the empalement shoots up the pointal, fixed like a nail in the bottom of the flower and of the tube, which is changed into a roundish fruit, divided into four or more seminal cells, gaping at the top, and inclosing seeds, covered over and wrapped within that soft ductile wool, commonly known by the name of cotton. The species are, 1. Hot or shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence, with a large quinquefid vine-leaf. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. It is sown upon tilled grounds in the spring of the year, and cut down and reaped in harvest, as corn with us. This cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk or seed-vessel growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. It is brought from the islands, where the natives take great care of its culture. There are several sorts of cotton fold, which differ according to the countries from whence they come, and the various preparations made of them. The first is the cotton in the wool; that is, that which comes from the shell, from which only we take the seed: those come from Cyprus, Smyrna, &c. The second is the cotton in the yarn: the second and third sorts are also annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude, from which the inhabitants are annually furnished with great quantities of cotton. One of these trees has a purplish and the other a yellow flower, which is the only difference between them. Miller.

Co'TTON. n. f. Cloath or stuff made of cotton.

To Co'TTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a nap.

2. To cement; to unite with: a cant word.

A quarrel between you will end in one of you being turned off, in which case it will not be easy to cotton with another. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

To COUCH. v. n. [coucher, French.]

1. To lie down on a place of repose.

If I court more women, you'll couch with more men. Shak.

Doth not the gentleman

Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed,

As ever Beatrice shall couch upon.

Shakespeare.

When love's fair goddess

2. To lie down on the knees, as a beast to rest.

Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,

Fierce tygers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden's Virg. Geor. b. iv. l. 41.

These when death

Comes like a rushing lion, couch like spaniels,
With lolling tongues, and tremble at the paw. Dryden.

3. To lye down in secret, or in ambush.

We'll couch i' th' castle-ditch, 'till we see the light of our fairies. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The earl of Angus couched in a furrow, and was passed over for dead, until a horse was brought for his escape. Hayward.

4. To lye in a bed, or stratum.

Blessed of the Lord be his land for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath. Deutr. xxxiii. 13.

5. To stoop; or bend down; to lower in fear, in pain, in respect.

To couch down between Issachar, is a strong ass couching down between two burdens. Gen. xlix. 14.

These couchings, and these lowly curtesies,

Might stir the blood of ordinary men. Shakesp. Jul. Caesar.

To COUCH. v. a.

1. To repose; to lay on a place of repose.

Where unbruised youth, with unstuff'd brain,

Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakesp.

2. To lay down any thing in a bed, or stratum.

If the weather be warm, we immediately couch malt about a foot thick; but if a hotter season require it, we spread it on the floor much thinner. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The sea and the land make one globe; and the waters couch themselves, as close as may be, to the centre of this globe, in a spherical convexity. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. To bed; to hide in another body.

It is at this day in use at Gaza, to couch potsherds, or vessels of earth, in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon's Nat. History.

4. To involve; to include; to comprise.

But who will call those noble who deface,

By meaner acts, the glories of their race;

Whose only title to our father's fame,

Is couch'd in the dead letters of their name? Dryden's Juv.

That great argument for a future state, which St. Paul hath couched in the words I have read to you. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. To include secretly; to hide: with under.

The foundation of all parables is some analogy or similitude between the topical or allusive part of the parable and the thing couched under it, and intended by it. South's Sermons.

There is all this, and more, that lies naturally couched under this allegory. L'Estrange, Fable 3.

The true notion of the institution being lost, the tradition of the deluge, which was couched under it, was thereupon at length suspended and lost. Woodward's Natural History.

6. To lay close to another.

And over all, with brazen scales was arm'd,

Like plated coat of steel, so couched near,

That nought might pierce. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. II.

7. To fix the spear in the rest; in the posture of attack.

The knight 'gan fairly couch his steady spear,

And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might. Fairy Queen.

Before each van

Prick forth the aery knights, and couch their spears,

'Till thickest legions close. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The former way'd in air

His flaming sword, Æneas couch'd his spear. Dryden's Æn.

8. To depress the film that overspreads the pupil of the eye.

This is improperly called couching the eye, for couching the cataract: with equal impropriety they sometimes speak of couching the patient.

Some artist, whose nice hand

Couches the cataracts, and clears his eyes,

And all at once a flood of glorious light

Comes rushing on his eyes. Dennis.

Whether the cataract be wasted by being separated from its vessels, I have never known positively, by dissecting one that had been couched. Sharp.

COUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A seat of repose, on which it is common to lye down dressed.

So Satan fell; and straight a fiery globe

Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,

Who on their plummy vans receiv'd him soft,

From his uneasy station, and upbore

As on a floating couch through the blithe air. Milt. Par. Reg.

To loll on couches, rich with citron steds,

And lay their guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. Dryd. Virg. Geo.

2. A bed; a place of repose.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be

A couch for luxury and damned incest. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Dire was the tossing! deep the groans! despair

Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch. Milt. Pa. Lost.

This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,

Forsook his early couch at early day. Dryden's Fables.

O, ye immortal pow'rs that guard the just,

Watch round his couch, and soften his repose. Addis. Cato.

3. A layer, or stratum.

This heap is called by maltsters a couch, or bed of raw malt. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'UCHANT. adj. [couchant, Fr.] Lying down; squatting.

If a lion were the proper coat of Judah, yet were it not probably a lion rampant, but rather couchant or dormant.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 10.

As a tiger, who by chance hath spy'd,

In some purlieu, two gentle fawns at play,

Strait couches close; then rising, changes oft

His couchant watch. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 403.

CO'UCHEE. n. f. [French.] Bedtime; the time of visiting late at night.

None of her sylvan subjects made their court;

CO'VENANT. n. f. [convenant, Fr. conventum, Latin.]

1. A contract; a stipulation.

He makes a covenant never to destroy

The earth again by flood; nor let the sea

Surpass his bounds. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 892.

The English make the ocean their abode,

Whose ready sails with ev'ry wind can fly,

And make a cov'nant with th' unconstant sky. Waller.

2. An agreement on certain terms; a compact.

A covenant is a mutual compact, as we now consider it, betwixt God and man; consisting of mercies on God's part, made over to man, and of conditions on man's part, required by God. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Some men live as if they had made a covenant with hell:
let divines, fathers, friends say what they will, they stop their ears against them. L'Estrange.

3. A writing containing the terms of agreement.

I shall but lend my diamond 'till your return; let there be covenants drawn between us. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To CO'VENANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To bargain; to stipulate.

His lord used commonly so to covenant with him, which if at any time the tenant disliked, he might freely depart at his pleasure. Spenser's State of Ireland.

It had been covenanted between him and the king of England, that neither of them should treat of peace or truce with the French king. Hayward on Edward VI.

By words men come to know one another's minds; by these they covenant and confederate. South's Sermons.

Jupiter covenanted with him, that it should be hot or cold, wet or dry, calm or windy, as the tenant should direct. L'Estr.

2. To agree with another on certain terms: with for.

They covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. Mat.

Pointing to a heap of sand,

For ev'ry grain to live a year demand;

But, ah! unmindful of th' effect of time,

Forgot to covenant for youth and prime. Garth's Ovid.

COVENANTE'E. n. f. [from covenant.] A party to a covenant;
a stipulator; a bargainer.

Both of them were respective rites of their admission into the several covenants, and the covenantees become thereby entitled to the respective privileges. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COVENANTER. n. f. [from covenant.] One who takes a covenant. A word introduced in the civil wars.

The covenanters shall have no more assurance of mutual assistance each from other, after the taking of the covenant, than they had before. Oxford Reasons against the Covenant.

CO'VENOUS. adj. [from covin.] Fraudulent; collusive; trickish.

I wish some means devised for the restraint of these inordinate and covenous leases of lands, holden in chief, for hundreds or thousands of years. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

covered over with corn. Psf. lxxv. 13.

A man ought not to cover his head. 1 Cor. xi. 7.

Go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

2. To conceal under something laid over.

Or lead me to some solitary place,

And cover my retreat from human race. Dryd. Virg. Geor.

3. To hide by superficial appearances.

4. To overwhelm; to bury.

Raillery and wit serve only to cover nonsense with shame, when reason has first proved it to be mere nonsense. Watts.

5. To shelter; to conceal from harm.

Charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

1 Pet. iv. 8.

6. To incubate; to brood on.

Natural historians observe, that only the male birds have voices; that their songs begin a little before breeding-time, and end a little after; that whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means amuses and diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Add. Spect.

7. To copulate with a female.

8. To wear the hat, or garment of the head, as a mark of superiority.

That king had conferred the honour of grandee upon him, which was of no other advantage or signification to him, than to be covered in the presence of that king. Dryd. Dedicat. Æn.

CO'VER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing that is laid over another.

The secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is shaped according to the parts.

The women took and spread a covering over the well's mouth. 2 Sam. xvii. 19.

Bring some covering for this naked soul,

Whom I'll intreat to lead me. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Sometimes providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it. South.

Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,

With coverings of Sidonian purple spread. Dryden's Fables.

CO'VERLET. n. f. [from couvrelet, French.] The outermost of the bedcloaths; that under which all the rest are concealed.

Lay her in lillies and in violets,

And filken curtains over her display,

And odour'd sheets, and arras coverlets. Spenser's Epithal.

With filken curtains and gold coverlets,

Therein to shrowd her sumptuous Bellamoure. Fairy Queen.

This done, the host produc'd the genial bed,

Which with no costly coverlet they spread. Dryden's Fables.

The difficulties I was in, for want of a house and bed, being forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet.

Gulliver's Travels.

CO'VERT. n. f. [from cover, couvert, French.]

1. A shelter; a defence.

Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler. Isaiab, xvi. 4.

There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain. Is. iv. 6.

They are by sudden alarm, or watch-word, to be called out to their military motions, under sky or covert, according to the season, as was the Roman wont. Milton on Education.

It was the hour of night, when thus the Son

Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down

Under the hospitable covert nigh

Of trees thick interwoven. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Now have a care your carnations catch not too much wet, therefore retire them to covert. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Tow'rd's him I made; but he was 'ware of me,

And stole into the covert of the wood. Shakesf. Rom. and Jul.

I shall be your faithful guide,

Through this gloomy covert wide. Milton.

Thence to the coverts, and the conscious groves,

The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves. Denham.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,

Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden's State of Innocence.

The deer is lodg'd; I've track'd her to her covert:

Be sure ye mind the word; and when I give it,

Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey. Addisf. Cato.

CO'VERT. adj. [from couvert, French.]

1. Sheltered; not open; not exposed.

You are, of either side the green, to plant a covert alley; upon carpenter's work, about twelve foot in height, by which you may go in shade into the garden. Bacon, Essay 47.

The fox is a beast also very prejudicial to the husbandman; especially in places that are near forest-woods and covert places. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Together let us beat this ample field,

Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope's Essays.

2. Secret; hidden; private; insidious.

And let us presently go sit in council,

How covert matters may be best disclos'd,

And open perils surest answered. Shakesf. Julius Cæsar.

By what best way,

Whether of open war, or covert guile,

We now debate. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 41.

CO'VERT. adj. [from couvert, French.] The state of a woman sheltered by marriage under her husband; as covert baron, feme covert.

Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert feme myself; to have my body disabled, and my head fortified. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

COVER T-WAY. n. f. [from covert and way.]

It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works toward the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgment on the covert-way, because usually the besieged palliade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor, and sometimes the counter-scarp, because it is on the edge of the scarp. Harris.

CO'VERTLY. adv. [from covert.] Secretly; closely; in private; with privacy.

Yet still Aragnol (so his foe was hight)

Lay lurking, covertly him to surprise. Spenser's Muirpotmos.

How can'st thou cross this marriage?

—Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me. Shakesf. Much ado about Nothing.

Amongst the poets, Persius covertly strikes at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation. Dryden.

CO'VERTNESS. n. f. [from covert.] Secrecy; privacy. Dict.

CO'VERTURE. n. f. [from covert.]

1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

It may be it is rather the shade, or other coverture, that they take liking in, than the virtue of the herb. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He saw his guileful act

By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded

Upon her husband; saw their shame that fought

Vain covertures. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 337.

The winds being so fierce, and the weather so severe, as not to suffer any thing to prosper or thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in any of all those islands, unless it be protected by walls; as in gardens, or other like coverture. Woodward.

2. In law.

The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in poteſtate viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation. Cowel.

The infancy of king Edward VI. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact, disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

TO COVET. v. a. [from convoyer, French.]

1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.

If it be a sin to covet honour,

I am the most offending man alive. Shakespeare's Henry V.

I am yet

Unknown to woman, never was forsworn;

Scarcely have coveted what was mine own,

At no time broke my faith. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

O father! can it be that souls sublime,

Return to visit our terrestrial clime?

And that the gen'rous mind, releas'd by death,

Can covet lazy limbs and mortal breath? Dryden's Æn.

2. To desire earnestly.

But covet earnestly the best gifts. 1 Cor. xii. 31.

TO CO'VET. v. n. To have a strong desire.

The love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith. 1 Tim. vi.

CO'VETABLE. adj. [from covet.] To be wished for; to be coveted. Dict.

CO'VETISE. n. f. [from convoytise, French.] Avarice; covetousness of money.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice,

Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store;

Whose need had end, but no end covetise. Fairy Queen, b. i.

CO'VETOUS. adj. [from convoyteux, French.]

1. Inordinately desirous.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,

The cruel nation, covetous of prey,

Stain'd with my blood the unhospitable coast. Dryden's Æn.

2. Inordinately eager of money; avaricious.

An heart they have exercised with covetous practices.

2 Pet. ii. 14.

What he cannot help in his nature, you must not account a vice in him: you must in no ways say he is covetous. Shakesp.

Let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.

3. Desirous; eager: in a good sense.

Sheba was never

More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,

Than this fair soul shall be.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He that is envious or angry at a virtue that is not his own, at the perfection or excellency of his neighbour, is not covetous of the virtue, but of its reward and reputation, and then his intentions are polluted. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

CO'VETOUSLY. adv. [from covetous.] Avariciously; eagerly.

If he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall's get it? Shakespeare.

CO'VETOUSNESS. n. f. [from covetous.] Avarice; inordinate desire of money; eagerness of gain.

When workmen strive to do better than well,

They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shakesp. K. John.

He that takes pains to serve the ends of covetousness, or ministers to another's lust, or keeps a shop of impurities or intemperance, is idle in the worst sense. Taylor's Holy Living.

Covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks it into the earth. Tillotson.

CO'VEY. n. f. [covee, French.]

1. A hatch; an old bird with her young ones.

2. A number of birds together.

A flight of wasps and covey of partridges went to a farmer, and begged a sup of him to quench their thirst. L'Estrange.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison's Freeholder, No. 3.

There would be no walking in a shady wood without springing a covey of toasts. Addison's Guardian, No. 112.

COUGH. n. f. [kuch, Dutch.] A convulsion of the lungs, vellicated by some sharp serosity. It is pronounced coff.

In consumptions of the lungs, when nature cannot expel the cough, men fall into fluxes of the belly, and then they die. Bacon's Natural History, No. 63.

For his dear sake long restless nights you bore,

While rattling coughs his heaving vessels tore. Smith.

TO COUGH. v. n. [kuchen, Dutch.] To have the lungs convulsed; to make a noise in endeavouring to evacuate the peccant matter from the lungs.

Thou didst drink

The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle

Which beasts would cough at. Shakesp. Anth. and Cleopatra.

Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the fun. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

The first problem enquireth why a man doth cough, but not an ox or cow; whereas the contrary is often observed. Brown.

If any humour be discharged upon the lungs, they have a faculty of clearing themselves, and casting it up by coughing. Ray on the Creation.

There are who to my person pay their court,

I cough like Horace, and though lean, am short. Pope's Ep.

TO COUGH. v. a. To eject by a cough; to expectorate.

If the matter be to be discharged by expectoration, it must first pass into the substance of the lung; then into the aspera arteria, or windand, and from thence be coughed up, and spit out by the mouth. Wifeman's Surgery.

CO'UGHER. n. f. [from cough.] One that coughs. Diët.

CO'VIN. } n. f. A deceitful agreement between two or more,

CO'VINE. } to the hurt of another. Cowel.

CO'VING. n. f. [from cove.] A term in building, used of houses that project over the ground-plot and the turned projecture arched with timber, lathed and plaistered. Harris.

COULD. [the imperfect preterite of can. See CAN.] Was able to; had power to.

And if I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain unto. 2 Mac. xv. 38.

What if he did not all the ill he could?

Am I oblig'd by that t' assist his rapines,

And to maintain his murders? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

CO'ULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The sharp iron of the plow which cuts the earth, perpendicular to the share.

The Israelites went down to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock. 1 Sa. xiii. 20.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties. Hammond on Fundamentals.

The plough for stiff clays is long and broad, and the coulter long, and very little bending, with a very large wing. Mortim.

COUNCIL. n. f. [concilium, Latin.]

1. An assembly of persons met together in consultation.

The chief priests, and all the council, sought false witness.

Mat. xxvi. 59.

In histories composed by politicians, they are for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council table. Addison's Spectator, No. 170.

2. An assembly of divines to deliberate upon religion.

Some borrow all their religion from the fathers of the Christian church, or from their synods or councils. Watts.

3. Persons called together to be consulted on any occasion, or to give advice.

They being thus assembled, are more properly a council to the king, the great council of the kingdom, to advise his majesty in those things of weight and difficulty, which concern both the king and people, than a court. Bacon's Adv. to Villiers.

4. The body of privy counsellors.

Without the knowledge

Either of king or council, you made bold

To carry into Flanders the great seal. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

COUNCIL-BOARD. n. f. [council and board.] Council-table; table where matters of state are deliberated.

He hath commanded,

To-morrow morning to the council-board;

He be convened. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When ship-money was transacted at the council-board, they looked upon it as a work of that power they were obliged to trust. Clarendon.

And Pallas, if she broke the laws,

Must yield her foe the stronger cause;

A shame to one so much ador'd

For wisdom at Jove's council-board. Swift.

COUNSEL. n. f. [consilium, Latin.]

1. Advice; direction.

Let me give thee counsel, that thou mayest save thine own life. 1 Kings, i. 12.

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer. Bacon, Essay 28.

The best counsel he could give him was, to go to his parliament. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. Consultation; interchange of opinions.

They that lay wait for my soul, take counsel together. Psal. lxxi. 10.

I hold as little counsel with weak fear.

As you, or any Scot that lives. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

3. Deliberation; examination of consequences.

They all confess therefore, in the working of that first cause, that counsel is used, reason followed, and a way observed. Hosker, b. i. sect. 7.

4. Prudence; art; machination.

O how comely is the wisdom of old men, and understanding and counsel to men of honour. Eccus. xxv. 5.

There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord. Prov. xxi. 30.

5. Secrecy; the secrets intrusted in consulting.

The players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all. Shakespeare.

6. Scheme; purpose; design.

The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. Psal. xxxiii. 11.

The Lord will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the heart. 1 Cor. iv. 5.

7. Those that plead a cause; the counsellors. This seems only an abbreviation usual in conversation.

Your hand, a covenant; we will have these things set down by lawful counsel. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

For the advocates and counsel that plead, patience and gravity of learning is an essential part of justice; and an over-speaking judge is no well tuned cymbal. Bacon, Essay 57.

What says my counsel learned in the law? Pope.

TO CO'UNSEL. v. a. [consilior, Latin.]

1. To give advice or counsel to any person.

But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,

Would'st thou then counsel me to fall in love? Shakespeare.

Truth shall nurse her;

Holy and heav'nly thoughts still counsel her. Shak. Hen. VIII.

Ill fortune never crushed that man whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counselled my friends never to trust to her fairer side, though she seemed to make peace with them. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

He supports my poverty with his wealth, and I counsel and instruct him with my learning and experience. Taylor.

2. To advise any thing.

The less had been our shame,

The less his counsel'd crime which brands the Grecian name. Dryden's Fables.

CO'UNSELLABLE. adj. [from counsel.] Willing to receive and follow the advice or opinions of others.

Very few men of so great parts were more counselleable than he; so that he would seldom be in danger of great errors, if he would communicate his own thoughts to disquisition. Clar.

CO'UNSELLOR. n. f. [from counsel.]

1. One that gives advice.

His mother was his counselor to do wickedly. 2 Chr. xxii. 3.

She would be a counselor of good things, and a comfort in cares. Wisd. viii. 9.

Death of thy soul! Those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Confidant; bosom friend.

In such green palaces the first kings reign'd,
Slept in their shades, and angels entertain'd;
With such old counsellors they did advise,
And by frequenting sacred groves grew wise. Waller.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon publick affairs.

You are a counsellor,

And by that virtue no man dare accuse you. Shak. H. VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts: the first, consilarii nati, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's sons: but the ordinary sort of counsellors are such as the king, out of a due consideration of their worth and abilities, and, withal, of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him, in his ordinary government. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law; a lawyer.

CO'UNSELLORSHIP. n. f. [from counsellor.] The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom, the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

TO COUNT. v. a. [compter, Fr. computare, Latin.]

1. To number; to tell.

Here through this grate I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.

The vicious count their years; virtuous, their acts. Johns.
For the preferments of the world, he that would reckon up all the accidents that they depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or to sum up infinity. South's Sermons.

When men in sickness ling'ring lie,

They count the tedious hours by months and years. Dryden.

Argos now rejoice, for Thebes lies low;

Thy slaughter'd sons now smile, and think they won,

When they can count more Theban ghosts than theirs. Dryd.

2. To preserve a reckoning.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others. Locke.

3. To reckon; to place to an account.

He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Gen. xv. 6.

Not barely the plowman's pains is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those who broke the oxen, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

4. To esteem; to account; to reckon; to consider as having a certain character, whether good or evil.

When once it comprehendeth any thing above this, as the differences of time, affirmations, negations, and contradictions in speech, we then count it to have some use of natural reason. Hooker, b. i. sect. 6.

Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial. 1 Sam. i.

Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy

The publick marks of honour and reward

Confer'd upon me. Milton's Agonist. l. 991.

You would not wish to count this man a foe!

In friendship, and in hatred, obstinate. Philips's Briton.

5. To impute to; to charge to.

All th' impossibilities, which poets

Count to extravagance of loose description,

Shall sooner be. Rowe's Ambitious Step-mother.

TO COUNT. v. n. To found an account or scheme: with upon.

I think it a great error to count upon the genius of a nation as a standing argument in all ages. Swift.

COUNT. n. f. [compte, French; computus, Latin.]

1. Number.

That we up to your palaces may mount,
Of blessed faints for to increase the count. Spenser's Epithal.

By my count,

I was your mother much upon these years. Sh. Ro. and Jul.

2. Reckoning.

Since I saw you last,

There is a change upon you.

——Well, I know not

What counts hard fortune casts upon my face. Shakespeare.

COUNT. n. f. [comte, Fr. comes, Latin.] A title of foreign nobility; an earl.

CO'UNTABLE. adj. [from count.] That which may be numbered.

The evils which you desire to be recounted are very many, and almost countable with those which were hidden in the basket of Pandora. Spenser's State of Ireland.

CO'UNTENANCE. n. f. [contenance, French.]

1. The form of the face; the system of the features.

So spake our fire, and by his count'nance seem'd

Entering on studious thoughts abstruse. Milton's Parad. Lost.

To whom, with count'nance calm, and soul sedate,

Thus Turnus.

Dryden's Æn.

2. Air; look.

Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me bluth;

Nor change my countenance for this arrest:

A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. Calmness of look; composure of face.

She smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look;

Or trembling hand, the fun'ral present took;

Ev'n kept her count'nance, when the lid remov'd;

Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd. Dryden's Fables.

The two maxims of any great man at court are, always to keep his countenance, and never to keep his word. Swift.

4. Confidence of mien; aspect of assurance.

The night beginning to persuade some retiring place, the gentlewoman, even out of countenance before she began her speech, invited me to lodge that night with her father. Sidney.

We will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Their best friends were out of countenance, because they found that the imputations, which their enemies had laid upon them, were well grounded. Clarendon, b. viii.

Your examples will meet it at every turn, and put it out of countenance in every place; even in private corners it will soon lose confidence. Sprat's Sermons.

If the outward profession of religion and virtue were once in practice and countenance at court, a good treatment of the clergy would be the necessary consequence. Swift.

If those preachers would look about, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep. Swift.

It is a kind of ill manners to offer objections to a fine woman, and a man would be out of countenance that should gain the superiority in such a contest: a coquette logician may be rallied, but not contradicted. Addison's Freeholder, No. 32.

It puts the learned in countenance, and gives them a place among the fashionable part of mankind. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Affection or ill-will, as it appears upon the face.

Yet the stout fairy, amongst the middest crowd,

Thought all their glory vain in knightly view,

And that great prince too, exceeding proud,

That to strange knight no better countenance allow'd. Fa. 2.

The king hath on him such a countenance,

As he had lost some province, and a region

Lov'd, as he loves himself. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

6. Patronage; appearance of favour; appearance on any side; support.

The church of Christ, which held that profession which had not the publick allowance and countenance of authority, could not so long use the exercise of Christian religion but in private. Hooker, b. v. sect. 11.

His majesty maintained an army here, to give strength and countenance to the civil magistrate. Davies on Ireland.

Now then, we'll use

His countenance for the battle; which being done,

Let her who would be rid of him, devise

His speedy taking off. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This is the magistrate's peculiar province, to give countenance to piety and virtue, and to rebuke vice and profaneness. Atterb.

7. Superficial appearance; show; resemblance.

The election being done, he made countenance of great discontent thereat. Afcham's Schoolmaster.

Oh, you blessed ministers above!

Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time

Unfold the evil, which is here wrapt up

In countenance. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Bianca's love

Made me exchange my state with Tranio,

While he did bear my countenance in the town. Shakespeare.

TO CO'UNTENANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support; to patronise; to vindicate.

Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause. Exod.

This conceit, though countenanced by learned men, is not made out either by experience or reason. Brown's Vulg. Err.

This national fault of being so very talkative, looks natural and graceful in one that has grey hairs to countenance it. Addis.

2. To make a shew of.

Each to these ladies love did countenance,

And to his mistress each himself strove to advance. Fai. Qu.

3. To act suitably to any thing; to keep up any appearance.

Malcolm! Banquo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprights,

To countenance this horror. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To encourage; to appear in defence.

At the first descent on shore he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

CO'UNTENANCER. n. f. [from countenance.] One that countenances or supports another.

CO'UNTER. n. f. [from count.]

1. A false piece of money used as a means of reckoning.

Though these half-pence are to be received as money in the Exchequer, yet in trade they are no better than counters. Swift's Considerations on Wood's Coin.

2. Money in contempt.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods! with all your thunder-bolts,
Dash him to pieces. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

3. The form on which goods are viewed and money told in a shop.
A fine gaudy minx, that robs our counters every night; and then goes out, and spends it upon our cuckold-makers. Dryden.
In half-whipt muslin, needles usefess lie;
And shuttle-cocks a-crofs the counter fly:
These sports warm harmfess. Gay's Trivia.
Sometimes you would see him behind his counter selling broad-cloth, sometimes meafuring linen. Arbuth. Hist. of J. B.
Whether thy counter shine with fums untold,
And thy wide-grafping hand grows black with gold. Swift.

4. COUNTER of a Horse, is that part of a horse's forehead that lies between the shoulder and under the neck. Farrier's Dict.

Co'UNTER. adv. [contre, Fr. contra, Latin.]

1. Contrary to; in opposition to.
Shall we erect two wills in Gods, and make the will of his purpose and intention run counter to the will of his approbation? South's Sermons.
The profit of the merchant, and the gain of the kingdom, are so far from being always parallels, that frequently they run counter one to the other. Child's Discourse on Trade.
He thinks it brave, at his first setting out, to signalize himself in running counter to all the rules of virtue. Locke.

2. The wrong way.
How chearfully on the false trail they cry,
Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. Contrary ways.
A man whom I cannot deny, may oblige me to use persuasions to another, which, at the same time I am speaking, I may wish may not prevail on him: in this case, it is plain, the will and the desire run counter. Locke.

4. This word is often found in composition, and may be placed before any word used in a sense of opposition.
That design was no sooner known, but others of an opposite party were appointed to set a counter-petition on foot. Clar.

To COUNTERACT. v. a. [counter and act.] To hinder any thing from its effect by contrary agency.
In this case we can find no principle within him strong enough to counteract that principle, and to relieve him. South.

To COUNTERBALANCE. v. a. [counter and balance.] To weigh against; to act against with an opposite weight.
There was so much air drawn out of the vessel, that the remaining air was not able to counterbalance the mercurial cylinder. Boyle.
Few of Adam's children are not born with some bias, which it is the business of education either to take off, or counterbalance. Locke.

COUNTERBALANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] Opposite weight; equivalent power.
But peaceful kings, o'er martial people set,
Each others poize and counterbalance are. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
Money is the counterbalance to all other things purchaseable by it, and lying, as it were, in the opposite scale of commerce. Locke.

To COUNTERBUFF. v. a. [from counter and buff.] To impell in a direction opposite to the former impulse; to strike back.
The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the diff'rent blows; then shoots amain,
'Till counterbuff'd she stops, and sleeps again. Dryden.

COUNTERBUFF. n. f. [counter and buff.] A blow in a contrary direction; a stroke that produces a recoil.
He at the second gave him such a counterbuff, that, because Phalantus was not to be driven from the saddle, the saddle with broken girths was driven from the horse. Sidney.
Go, captain Stub, lead on, and show
What house you come of, by the blow
You give fir Quintin, and the cuff
You 'scape o' th' sandbags counterbuff. Ben. Johnson.

Co'UNTERCASTER. n. f. [from counter, for a false piece of money, and caster.] A word of contempt for an arithmetician; a book-keeper; a caster of accounts; a reckonr.
I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, must be let and calm'd
By debtor and creditor, this countercaster. Shakesp. Othello.

Co'UNTERCHANGE. n. f. [counter and change.] Exchange; reciprocation.
She, like harmfess lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master, hitting Each object with a joy. The counterchange
Is sev'rally in all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To Co'UNTERCHANGE. v. a. To give and receive.

COUNTERCHARM. n. f. [counter and charm.] That by which a charm is dissolved; that which has the power of destroying the effects of a charm.
Now touch'd by countercharms they change again,
And stand majestick, and recall'd to men. Pope's Odyssey.

To COUNTERCHARM. v. a. [from counter and charm.] To destroy the effect of an enchantment.
Like a spell it was to keep us invulnerable, and so countercharm all our crimes, that they should only be active to please, not hurt us. Decay of Piety.

To COUNTERCHECK. v. a. [counter and check.] To oppose; to stop with sudden opposition.

COUNTERCHECK. n. f. [from the verb.] Stop; rebuke.
If again I said his beard was not well cut, he would say I lye: this is called the countercheck quarrellsome. Shakespeare.

To COUNTERDRAW. v. a. [from counter and draw.] With painters, to copy a design or painting by means of a fine linen cloth, an oiled paper, or other transparent matter, whereon the strokes appearing through are traced with a pencil. Chamb.

COUNTEREVIDENCE. n. f. [counter and evidence.] Testimony by which the deposition of some former witness is opposed.
Sense itself detects its more palpable deceits by a counterevidence, and the more ordinary impostures seldom outlive the first experiments. Glanville's Scip. c. 10.
We have little reason to question his testimony in this point, seeing it is backed by others of good credit, and all because there is no counterevidence, nor any witness that appears against it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To CO'UNTERFEIT. v. a. [contrefaire, French.]

1. To copy with an intent to pass the copy for an original; to forge.
What art thou,
That counterfeits the person of a king? Shakesp. Henry IV.
It came into this priest's fancy to cause this lad to counterfeit and personate the second son of Edward IV. supposed to be murdered. Bacon's Henry VII.
There have been some that could counterfeit the distance of voices, which is a secondary object of hearing, in such sort, as when they stand fast by you, you would think the speech came from afar off in a fearful manner. Bacon's Nat. History.
Say, lovely dream, where could'st thou find Shadows to counterfeit that face? Waller.
It happens, that not one single line or thought is contained in this imposture, although it appears that they who counterfeited me had heard of the true one. Swift.

2. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.
And, Oh, you mortal engines, whose rude throats
Th' immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit, Farewel! Shakespeare's Othello.
O Eve! in evil hour thou did'st give ear
To that false worm, of whomsoever taught
To counterfeit man's voice. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
To counterfeit, is to put on the likeness and appearance of some real excellency: Bristol-stones would not pretend to be diamonds, if there never had been diamonds. Tillotson's Serm.

Co'UNTERFEIT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. That which is made in imitation of another, with intent to pass for the original; forged; fictitious.
I learn
Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are, who friends
Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head. Milton.
General observations drawn from particulars, are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room; but they are therefore to be made with the greater care and caution, lest, if we take counterfeit for true, our shame be the greater, when our flock comes to a severe scrutiny. Locke.

2. Deceitful; hypocritical.
True friends appear less mov'd than counterfeit. Roscomm.

Co'UNTERFEIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. One who personates another; an impostor.
I am no counterfeit; to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
This priest, being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, yet could think it possible for him to instruct his player, either in gesture or fashions, or in recounting past matters of his life and education, or in fit answers to questions, any ways to come near the resemblance of him whom he was to represent. Bacon.
But trust me, child, I'm much inclin'd to fear
Some counterfeit in this your Jupiter. Addison's Ovid. Metam.

2. Something made in imitation of another, intended to pass for that which it resembles; a forgery.
My father was I know not where,
When I was stamp'd. Some coiner, with his tools,
Made me a counterfeit; yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something that is real; for though all pretenders seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. Tillotson's Sermons.

Co'UNTERFEITER. n. f. [from counterfeit.] A forger; one who contrives copies to pass for originals.
Henry the second altered the coin, which was corrupted by counterfeiters, to the great good of the commonwealth. Camden.

Co'UNTERFEITLY.

Co'UNTERFEITLY. adv. [from counterfeit.] Falsely; fictitiously; with forgery.

Since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my cap than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitly. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

COUNTERFERMENT. n. f. [counter and ferment.] Ferment opposed to ferment.

What unnatural motions and counterferments must a medly of intemperance produce in the body! When I behold a fashionable table, I fancy I see innumerable distempers lurking in ambuscade among the dishes. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 195.

COUNTERFE'SANCE. n. f. [contrefaisance, French.] The act of counterfeiting; forgery.

And his man Reynold, with fine counterfesance, Supports his credit and his countenance. Hubberd's Tale.

Such is the face of falshood, such the sight

Of foul Dueſſa, when her borrow'd light

Is laid away, and counterfesance known. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Co'UNTERFORT. n. f. [from counter and fort.]

Counterforts, buttresses or spurs, are pillars serving to support walls or terrasses, subject to bulge, or be thrown down. Chambers.

COUNTERGA'GE. n. f. [from counter and gage.] In carpentry, a method used to measure the joints by transferring the breadth of a mortise to the place where the tenon is to be, in order to make them fit each other. Chambers.

COUNTERGUA'RD. n. f. [from counter and guard.] A small rampart with parapet and ditch, to cover some part of the body of the place. Military Dict.

COUNTERLI'GHT. n. f. [from counter and light.] A window or light opposite to any thing, which makes it appear to a disadvantage. Chambers.

To COUNTERMAND. v. a. [contremander, French.]

1. To order the contrary to what was ordered before; to contradict, annul, or repeal a command.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, and finites their policies with frustration and a curse. South's Sermons.

Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies, because he esteems the blood a bridle of the gall. Harvey.

2. To oppose; to contradict the orders of another.

For us to alter any thing, is to lift up ourselves against God, and, as it were, to countermand him. Hooker.

COUNTERMA'ND. n. f. [contrmand, Fr.] Repeal of a former order.

Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,

But he must die to-morrow? Shakeſ. Measure for Measure.

To COUNTERMA'RH. v. n. [counter and march.] To march backward; to march in indirect ways.

COUNTERMA'RH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Retrocession; march backward; march in a different direction from the former.

How are such an infinite number of things placed with such order in the memory, notwithstanding the tumults, marches, and countermarches of the animal spirits? Collier on Thought.

2. Change of measures; alteration of conduct.

They make him do and undo, go forward and backwards by such countermarches and retractions, as we do not willingly impute to wisdom. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

COUNTERMA'RK. n. f. [from counter and mark.]

1. A second or third mark put on a bale of goods belonging to several merchants, that it may not be opened but in the presence of them all.

2. The mark of the goldsmiths company, to shew the metal is standard, added to that of the artificer.

3. An artificial cavity made in the teeth of horses, that have outgrown their natural mark, to disguise their age.

4. A mark added to a medal a long time after it is struck, by which the curious know the several changes in value which they have undergone. Chambers.

To COUNTERMA'RK. v. a. [counter and mark.]

A horse is said to be countermarked when his corner-teeth are artificially made hollow, a false mark being made in the hollow place, in imitation of the eye of a bean, to conceal the horse's age. Farrier's Dict.

COUNTERMI'NE. n. f. [counter and mine.]

1. A well or hole sunk into the ground, from which a gallery or branch runs out under ground, to seek out the enemy's mine, and disappoint it. Military Dict.

After this they mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouths; but the citizens made a countermine, and thereinto they poured such a plenty of water, that the wet powder could not be fired. Hayward.

2. Means of opposition; means of counteraction.

He thinking himself contemned, knowing no countermine against contempt but terror, began to let nothing pass, which might bear the colour of a fault, without sharp punishment. Sidney, b. ii.

3. A stratagem by which any contrivance is defeated.

The matter being brought to a trial of skill, the countermine was only an act of self-preservation. L'Eſtrange, Fab. 37.

To COUNTERMI'NE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To delve a passage into an enemy's mine, by which the powder may evaporate without mischief.

2. To counterwork; to defeat by secret measures.

Thus infallibly it must be, if God do not miraculously countermine us, and do more for us than we can do against ourselves. Decay of Piety.

COUNTERMO'TION. n. f. [counter and motion.] Contrary motion; opposition of motion.

That resistance is a countermotion, or equivalent to one, is plain by this, that any body which is pressed, must needs press again on the body that presses it. Digby on the Soul.

If any of the returning spirits should happen to fall foul upon others which are outward bound, these countermotions would overſet them; or occasion a later arrival. Collier.

COUNTERMU'RE. n. f. [contremur, French.] A wall built up behind another wall, to supply its place.

The great shot flying continually through the breach, did beat down houses; but the countermure, new built against the breach, standing upon a lower ground, it seldom touched. Knolles's History of the Turks.

COUNTERNA'TURAL. adj. [counter and natural.] Contrary to nature.

A consumption is a counternatural heclick extenuation of the body. Harvey on Consumptions.

COUNTERNO'ISE. n. f. [counter and noise.] A sound by which any other noise is overpowered.

They endeavoured, either by a constant succession of sensual delights, to charm and lull asleep, or else, by a counternoise of revellings and riotous excesses, to drown the softer whispers of their conscience. Calamy's Sermons.

COUNTERO'PENING. n. f. [counter and opening.] An aperture or vent on the contrary side.

A tent, plugging up the orifice, would make the matter recur to the part disposed to receive it, and mark the place for a counteropening. Sharp's Surgery.

COUNTERPA'CE. n. f. [counter and pace.] Contrary measure; attempts in opposition to any scheme.

When the least counterpaces are made to these resolutions, it will then be time enough for our malecontents. Swift.

Co'UNTERPANE. n. f. [contrepoin, French.] A coverlet for a bed, or any thing else woven in squares. It is sometimes written, according to etymology, counterpoint.

In ivory coffers I have stufft my crowns;

In cypress chests my arras counterpanes.

COUNTERPA'RT. n. f. [counter and part.] The correspondent part; the part which answers to another, as the two papers of a contract; the part which fits another, as the key of a cipher.

In some things the laws of Normandy agreed with the laws of England; so that they seem to be, as it were, copies or counterparts one of another. Hale's Common Law of England.

An old fellow with a young wench, may pass for a counterpart of this fable. L'Eſtrange, Fab. 82.

Oh counterpart

Of our soft sex; well are you made our lords:

So bold, so great, so god-like are you form'd,

How can you love so silly things as women? Dryd. K. Arth.

He is to consider the thought of his author, and his words, and to find out the counterpart to each in another language. Dryden.

In the discovery the two different plots look like counterparts and copies of one another. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 267.

COUNTERPLE'A. n. f. [from counter and plea.] In law, a replication: as if a stranger to the action begun, desire to be admitted to say what he can for the safeguard of his estate; that which the demandant allegeth against this request is called a counterplea. Cowel.

To COUNTERPLO'T. v. a. [counter and plot.] To oppose one machination by another; to obviate art by art.

COUNTERPLO'T. n. f. [from the verb.] An artifice opposed to an artifice.

The wolf here, that had a plot upon the kid, was confounded by a counterplot of the kid's upon the wolf; and such a counterplot it was too, as the wolf, with all his sagacity, was not able to smell out. L'Eſtrange, Fab. 174.

Co'UNTERPOINT. n. f. A coverlet woven in squares, commonly spoken counterpain. See COUNTERPANE.

To COUNTERPO'ISE. v. a. [counter and poise.]

1. To counterbalance; to be equi-ponderant to; to act against with equal weight.

Our spoil we have brought home,

Do more than counterpoise a full third part

The charges of the action. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The force and the distance of weights, counterpoising one another, ought to be reciprocal. Digby on the Soul.

2. To produce a contrary action by an equal weight.

The heaviness of these bodies must be counterpoised by a plummet, that may be fastened about the pulley to the axis. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

3. To act with equal power against any person or cause.

So many freeholders of English will be able to beard and to counterpoise the rest. Spenser on Ireland.

COUNTERPO'ISE.

CO'UNTERPOISE. n. f. [from counter and poise.]

1. Equiponderance; equivalence of weight; equal force in the opposite scale of the balance.

Take her by the hand,

And tell her she is thine; to whom I promise

A counterpoise, if not in thy estate,

A balance more replete. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

Fastening that to our exact balance, we put a metalline counterpoise into the opposite scale. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The state of being placed in the opposite scale of the balance.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales,

Wherein all things created first he weigh'd,

The pendulous round earth, with balanc'd air

In counterpoise. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 999.

3. Equipollence; equivalence of power.

The second nobles are a counterpoise to the higher nobility, that they grow not too potent. Bacon, Essay 20.

Their generals, by their credit in the army, were, with the magistrates and other civil officers, a sort of counterpoise to the power of the people. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.

COUNTERPO'ISON. n. f. [counter and poison.] Antidote; medicine by which the effects of poison are obviated.

Counterpoisons must be adapted to the cause; for example, in poison from sublimate corrosive, and arsenick. Arbuthnot.

COUNTERPRE'SSURE. n. f. [counter and pressure.] Opposite force; power acting in contrary directions.

Does it not all mechanick heads confound,

That troops of atoms from all parts around,

Of equal number, and of equal force,

Should to this single point direct their course;

That so the counterpressure ev'ry way,

Of equal vigour, might their motions stay,

And, by a steady poise, the whole in quiet lay? Blackm.

COUNTERPRO'JECT. n. f. [counter and project.] Correspondent part of a scheme.

A clear reason why they never sent any forces to Spain, and why the obligation not to enter into a treaty of peace with France, until that entire monarchy was yielded as a preliminary, was struck out of the counterproject by the Dutch. Swift.

To COUNTERPRO'VE. v. a. [from counter and prove.] To take off a design in black lead, or red chalk, by passing it through the rolling-press with another piece of paper, both being moistened with a sponge. Chambers.

To COUNTERROL. v. a. [counter and roll.] This is now generally written as it is spoken, control.] To preserve the power of detecting frauds by a counter account.

COUNTERRO'LEMENT. n. f. [from counterrol.] A counter account; controlment.

This present manner of exercising of this office, hath so many testimonies, interchangeable warrants, and counterrolments, whereof each, running through the hands, and resting in the power of so many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falshood. Bacon.

CO'UNTERSCARP. n. f. [from counter and scarp.] In fortification, is that side of the ditch which is next the camp, or properly the talus that supports the earth of the covert-way; although by this term is often understood the whole covert-way, with its parapet and glacis; and so it is to be understood when it is said the enemy lodged themselves on the counterscarp. Harris.

To COUNTERSIGN. v. a. [from counter and sign.] To sign an order or patent of a superiour, in quality of secretary, to render the thing more authentick. Thus charters are signed by the king, and countersigned by a secretary of state, or lord chancellor. Chambers.

COUNTERTE'NOR. n. f. [from counter and tenor.] One of the mean or middle parts of musick; so called, as it were, opposite to the tenor. Harris.

I am deaf for two months together: this deafness unqualifies me for all company, except a few friends with countertenor voices. Swift.

COUNTERTIDE. n. f. [counter and tide.] Contrary tide; fluctuations of the water.

Such were our countertides at land, and so

Prefaging of the fatal blow,

In your prodigious ebb and flow. Dryden.

COUNTERTIME. n. f. [counter and time, contretemps, French.]

1. The defence or resistance of a horse, that intercepts his cadence, and the measure of his manage. Farrier's Dict.

2. Defence; opposition.

Let cheerfulness on happy fortune wait,

And give not thus the countertime to fate. Dryd. Aurengz.

COUNTERTURN. n. f. [counter and turn.]

The catastasis, called by the Romans status, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

To COUNTERVA'IL. v. a. [contra and valeo, Latin.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not lightly to be shaken off. Hooker, b. ii. sect. 7.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,

And with important outrage him assail'd;

Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,

And him with equal valour countervail'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight, whereby the ascending side, in every one of these revolutions, does exceed the other; and though this may be effected by making the water-wheels larger, yet then the motion will be so slow, that the screw will not be able to supply the outward streams. Wilkins's Dedalus.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniencies that go along with it. L'Estrange, Fable 112.

COUNTERVA'IL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review, which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever. South's Sermons.

COUNTERVIE'W. n. f. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

Mean while, ere thus was fin'd and judg'd on earth,

Within the gates of hell sat sin and death,

In counterview. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 231.

2. Contrast; a position in which two dissimilar things illustrate each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counterview or contrast with that of the other company. Swift's Introduction to Genteel Conversation.

To COUNTERWO'RK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole:

That counterworks each folly and caprice;

That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice. Pope's Ess. on Man.

CO'UNTESS. n. f. [comitissa, Lat. comtesse, French.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,

Is that old noble lady, the dutches of Norfolk.

—It is, and all the rest are countesses. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abingdon to have been so truly loved by you, while she was living; and so gratefully honoured after she was dead. Dryden.

COUNTING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.] The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, 'till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags, cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them. Locke.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kifs for kifs,

Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:

O, were the sum of these that I should pay

Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them. Shakespeare.

But oh, her mind, that orcus which includes

Legions of mischief, countless multitudes

Of former curses. Donne.

By one countless sum of woes oppress,

Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,

We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;

Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

I see, I cry'd, his woes, a countless train;

I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main. Pope's Odyss.

The seats which, shining through the cheerful land,

In countless numbers, blest Britannia sees. Thomson's Autumn.

CO'UNTRY. n. f. [contrée, Fr. contrata, low Latin; supposed to be contracted from contrerrata.]

1. A tract of land; a region.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round,

Hang those that talk of fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed. Sprat.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country. Spectator, No. 626.

3. The place which any man inhabits.

4. The place of one's birth; the native soil.

The king set on foot a reformation in the ornaments and advantages of our country. Sprat.

O, save my country, heav'n, shall be your last. Pope.

5. The inhabitants of any region.

All the country, in a general voice,

Cry'd hate upon him; all their prayers and love

Were set on Hereford. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

CO'UNTRY. adj. [This word is scarcely used but in composition.]

1. Rustick;

1. Rustick; rural; villatick.

Cannot a country wench know, that having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, that the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal? Locke.

I never meant any other, than that Mr. Trot should confine himself to country dances. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 308.

He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinite, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood. Locke.

Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the notions they apply this name to, are so odd that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man. Locke.

The low mechanicks of a country town do somewhat outdo him. Locke.

Come, we'll e'en to our country seat repair,

The native home of innocence and love. Norris.

2. Remote from cities or courts, and of an interest opposite to that of courts.

A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house. Locke.

3. Peculiar to a region or people.

She laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spake in her country language. 2 Macabees, vii. 27.

4. Rude; ignorant; untaught.

We make a country man dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

CO'UNTRYMAN. n. f. [from country and man]1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?

My countryman; but yet I know him not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Horace, great bard, so fate ordain'd, arose;

And bold as were his countrymen in fight,

Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,

And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addison on the State of the War.

2. A rustick; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Estrange.

CO'UNTY. n. f. [comitè, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the better government thereof, and the more easy administration of justice; so that there is no part of the kingdom, but what lieth within some county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who, among other duties belonging to his office, puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that whereas all pleas, touching the life and the maiming of a man, called pleas of the crown, and ordinarily held in the king's name, and which cannot pass in the name of any other; the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself in other counties, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. Besides the above counties of both sorts, there are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court which the sheriff keeps every month within his charge, either by himself or his deputy. Of these counties, one with another, there are reckoned thirty-seven in England, besides twelve in Wales. Cowel.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,

As we will ours. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman and her fatherless children. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 517.

2. An earldom.

3. A count; a lord: now wholly obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,

The county Paris. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liberè ad gladium sicut rex tenebat Angliam ad coronam. Davies.

COUPE'E. n. f. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLE. n. f. [couple, Fr. copula, Latin.]

VOL. I.

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-stand where

I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her,

Than when I feel and see no further trust her. Shakespeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in couples; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange's Fab.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and your's, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ajcham.

A piece of chrystal inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the couples three,

Ever true in loving be. Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

Oh! alas!

I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth

Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as

You gracious couple do. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bacon's New Atlantis.

He said: the careful couple join their tears,

And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley's Sermons.

To CO'UPLE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.]

Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. f. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land,

E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

CO'UPLET. n. f. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhimes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney, b. i.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught

With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;

A needless Alexandrine ends the song,

That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

In Pope I cannot read a line,

But with a sigh I wish it mine;

When he can in one couplet fix

More sense than I can do in six,

It gives me such a jealous fit,

I cry, pox take him and his wit.

Swift.

18. Series of consequences.

Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and power;

No muse is proof against a golden show'r. Garth.

With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.

19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.

Worthy sir, thou bleed'st:

Thy exercise hath been too violent

For a second course of fight. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Then with a second course the tables load,

And with full chargers offer to the god. Dryden's Æn.

You are not to wash your hands 'till after you have sent up your second course. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear

Sancho's dread doctor and his wand was there. Pope.

20. Regularity; settled rule.

And Atin ay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong.

Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5. Stanz. 38.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed

A pair of coursers, born of heav'nly breed;

Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,

Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire. Dryden's Æn.

Th' impatient coursier pants in every vein,

And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;

Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,

And, e're he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares.

A leash is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

COURT. n. f. [cour, Fr. koert, Dut. curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,

Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners,

Shews like a riotous inn; Epicurism and lust,

Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,

Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare's King Lear.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.

Isaiah, xxvi. 13.

His care and exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness and civility with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one.

Prior's Dedication.

A suppliant to your royal court I come. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference

That holds this present question in the court? Shakespeare.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation.

Hast thou been never base? Did love ne'er bend

Thy frailer virtue, to betray thy friend?

Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;

Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid. Dryd. Aureng.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves. Locke, sect. 18.

I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing. Swift to Gay.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;

Seem to fly it, it will pursue:

So court a mistress, she denies you;

Let her alone, she will court you. Ben. Johnson's Forest.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,

The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed. Dryden's Æn.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love

To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?

Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling vestal,

While she beholds the holy flame expiring. Addison's Cato.

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,

A thousand court you, though they court in vain. Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned. Locke on Education, sect. 59.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

The Corinthian is a column, lasciviously decked like a courtesan. Wotton.

Charixus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her. Addison's SpeAator.

CO'URTESY. n. f. [courtoisie, Fr. cor-esia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:

It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers. Peacham.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen. Clarendon.

So gentle of condition was he known,

That through the court his courtesy was blown. Dryd. Fab.

2. An act of civility or respect.

Fair fir, you spit on me last Wednesday;
You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Repose you there, while I to the hard house

Return, and force their scant'd courtesy. Shakesp. K. Lear.

When I was last at Exeter,

The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle. Shakesp. R. III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,

And by that musick let us all embrace;

For heav'n to earth some of us never shall

A second time do such a courtesy. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, scarce to a court'sy bred,

Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;

If, supercilious, haughty, proud and vain,

She brought her father's triumphs in her train. Dryd. Juven.

The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is, I endeavoured to make her look something Christian-like. Congreve's Old Batchelor.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others; as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritance, that is, a woman seized of land, and getteth a child of her that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith; yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Angliæ, or by the courtesy of England. Cowel.

Co'URTIER. n. f. [from court.]

1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears.——

If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one. Shakespeare's As you like it.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state-affairs. Bac.

The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of all his attendants.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What

Made thee, all honour'd honest Roman Brutus,

With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,

To drench the capitol? Shakesp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

He paid his courtship with the croud,

As far as modest pride allow'd. Swift.

2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts

To courtship, and such fair ostents of love,

As shall conveniently become you there. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

In tedious courtship we declare our pain,

And e're we kindness find, first meet disdain. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 113.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university,

My modesty I give to soldiers bare;

My patience to a gamester's share. Donne.

CO'USIN. n. f. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Lat.] Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister.

Macbeth unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops,

And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

—Oh, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Tybalt, my cousin! O, my brother's child!

Unhappy fight! alas, the blood is spill'd

Of my dear kinsman. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,

And cousin german to great Priam's seed. Sh. Troil. and Cress.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

COW. n. f. [in the plural, anciently kine, or keen, now commonly cows; cu, Sax. ko, Dutch.] The female of the bull; the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bulls; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.

After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone. Wiseman's Surgery.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cows,

He fought himself some hospitable house:

Good Creton entertain'd his godlike guest. Dryden's Fables.

To Cow. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb

Untimely ripp'd.——

——Accursed be that tongue that tells me so;

For it hath cow'd my better part of man. Shakesp. Macbeth.

By reason of their frequent revolts they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat cowed their spirits. Howel's Vocal Forest.

For when men by their wives are cow'd,

Their horns of course are understood. Hudibras, p. ii. c. 2.

COW-HERD. n. f. [cow and hyrd, Sax. a keeper.] One whose occupation is to tend cows.

COW-HOUSE. n. f. [cow and house] The house in which kine are kept.

You must house your milch-cows, that you give hay to in your cow-house all night. Mortimer.

COW-LEECH. n. f. [cow and leech.] One who professes to cure distempered cows.

To Cow-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COW-WEED. n. f. [cow and weed.] A species of chervil; which see.

COW-WHEAT. n. f. [from cow and wheat.]

The leaves of this plant grow opposite by pairs: the flower consists of one leaf; is of an anomalous figure, and divided into two lips, the uppermost of which has a spur, but the under one is intire: the fruit is round, and divided into two cells, containing seeds resembling grains of wheat. This plant is very common in woods, and shady places. Miller.

CO'WARD. n. f. [coward, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltron; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Musidorus to courage, though he had been born a coward. Sidney, b. ii.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look back Bacon, Apophth. 188.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.

What can ennoble fots, and slaves, and cowards?

Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards. Pope.

Tremble ye not, Oh friends! and cowards fly,

Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die! Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;

And rais'd the house with loud and coward cries Shakespeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy,

And ills foreseen the present bliss destroy. Prior.

Co'WARDICE.

Co'WARDICE. n. f. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, fir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;
And with foul cowardice his carcase shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name. Fairy Queen.
Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroick valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton on Education.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame;
The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryden's Fables.

This great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane.

Rogers, Sermon 4.

Co'WARDLINESS. n. f. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

Co'WARDLY. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon's Natural History, No. 940.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and style a cowardly silence in Christ's cause discretion, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. South's Sermons.

2. Mean; befitting a coward.

I do find it cowardly, and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Co'WARDLY. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly;
vilely.

He sharply reprov'd them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.

Co'WARDSHIP. n. f. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness: a word not now in use.

A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

To Co'WER. v. n. [cwrrian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.]
To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, and then he cower down, and the pail be pressed down with him.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 155.

The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakespeare.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld,
Approaching two and two; these cw'ring low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

Our dame sits cw'ring o'er a kitchen fire;
I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire. Dryden's Fables.

Co'WISH. adj. [from To cow, to awe.] Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Co'WKEEPER. n. f. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd, are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

COWL. n. f. [cugle, Saxon; cucullus, Latin.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his friery cowl in a cornfield. Camden's Rem.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?

I'll tell you, friend, a wise man and a fool. Pope's Essays.

2. A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. n. f. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tossing him something high)
He apprehended to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster. Wiseman.

Co'WSLIP. n. f. [cyrilippe, Sax: as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture-grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of PRIMROSE, which see. Miller.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakespeare's Tempest.

VOL. I.

Thy little sons

Permit to range the pastures: gladly they
Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet.

Philips.

COWS-LUNGWORT. n. f. See MULLEN, of which it is a species. Miller.

Co'xCOMB. n. f. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the pasty alive; she rapt them o' th' coxcombs with a stick, and cried down; wantons, down. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will:
if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shakes.

3. A fop; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her,

By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,
Tokens and letters, which she did send. Shakespeare.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly,

Quarter or council from a foe. Hudibras, p. i. cant. iii.

It is a vanity common in the world, for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters.

L'Estrange, Table 135.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name. Dryd. Dufres.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,

And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools. Pope.

COXCO'MICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

COY. adj. [coi, French, from quietus, Latin.]

1. Modest; decent.

Jafon is as coy as is a maide;

He loked piteously, but naught he said. Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass,

A foe of folly and immodest toy;

Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy;

Like Daphne she, as lovely and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon. Pope.

To Coy. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again!

No more; but make me happy to my gust,

That is, without your struggling. Dryden's King Arthur.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.—

—Thus to coy it!

With one who knows you too! Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he coy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home. Shak. Coriolan.

Co'YLY. adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This said; his hand he coyly snatcht away

From forth Antinous' hand. Chapman's Odyssey, b. ii.

Co'YNESS. n. f. [from coy.] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female; and she putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags. Walton.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign,

And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

Co'YSTREL. n. f. A species of degenerate hawk.

One they might trust, their common wrongs to wreak:

The musquet and the coystrel were too weak,

Too fierce the falcon. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

Coz. n. f. A cant or familiar word, contracted from cousin.

Be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow

Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow. Shak.

To CO'ZEN. v. a. [To cose is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chop or change; whence cozen, to cheat, because in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the muster-master view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Goring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and then expose him to publick mirth for having been cozen'd.

Clarendon, b. viii:

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it. L'Estrange, Fab. 21. Reflect.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden.

What if I please to lengthen out his date

A day, and take a pride to cozen fate. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport. Locke on Education.

CO'ZENAGE. n. f. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fal-lacy; trick; cheat.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage, and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,

It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago

Lik'd certain colours mingl'd so and so,

That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Glanv. Scept. c. 14.

Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;

And from the dregs of life, think to receive

What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryd. Aur.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. f. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it be-hoves men to be wary. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

CRAB. n. f. [crabba, Sax. krabbe, Dutch.]

1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they scale off and crumble away by degrees. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fox catches crab fish with his tail, which Olaus Mag-nus saith he himself was an eye-witness of. Derham.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble stock

Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakesp.
Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,

Then nightly sings the staring owl. Shakespeare.

Imagine you see him laid forth, newly slain, upon a bier of crab-tree and oaken rods. Peacham on Drawing:

Let him tell why a graft, taking nourishment from a crab stock, shall have a fruit more noble than its nurse and parent. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

3. A peevish morose person.

4. A wooden engine with three claws for launching of ships, or heaving them into the dock. Philips.

5. The sign in the zodiack.

Then parts the Twins and Crab, the Dog divides,

And Argo's keel, that broke the frothy tides. Creech's Manil.

CRAB. adj. It is used by way of contempt for any four or de-generate fruit; as, a crab cherry, a crab plum.

Better gleanings their worn soil can boast,

Than the crab vintage of the neighb'ring coast. Dryden.

CRA'BBED. adj. [from crab.]

1. Peevish; morose; cynical; four.

A man of years, yet fresh, as mote appear,

Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,

That him full of melancholy did shew. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

O, she is

Ten times more gentle, than her father's crabbed;

And he's compos'd of harshness. Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when

Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,

'Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,

And clepe thyself my love. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

How charming is divine philosophy!

Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,

But musical as is Apollo's lute,

And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,

Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton.

Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed. Dryden.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,

And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;

Whate'er the crabbedst author hath,

He understood b' implicit faith. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius,

Are against gods, you know, and teach us,

The god makes not the poet. Prior.

CRA'BBEDLY. adv. [from crabbed.] Peevishly.

CRA'BBEDNESS. n. f. [from crabbed.]

1. Sourness of taste.

2. Sourness of countenance; asperity of manners.

3. Difficulty.

CRA'BER. n. f.

The poor fish have enemies enough, beside such unnatural fishermen; as otters, the cormorant, and the crabber, which some call the water-rat. Walten's Angler.

CRABS-EYES. n. f. They are whitish bodies, from the big-ness of a pea to that of the largest horse-bean, rounded on one side and depressed on the other, heavy, moderately hard, and without smell. They are not the eyes of any creature, nor do they belong to the crab; but are produced by the com-mon crawfish: the large sea crawfish also affords them; and the stones are bred in two separate bags, one on each side of the stomach. In July, and part of June and August, when the creature casts its shell, the stones are not found in their places. We have them from Holland, Muscovy, Poland, Denmark, Sweden, and many other places. They are alkali-ne, absorbent, and in some degree diuretick. Hill's Mat. Med.

Several persons had, in vain, endeavoured to store them-selves with crabs-eyes. Boyle's Experiments.

CRACK. n. f. [kræck, Dutch.]

1. A sudden disruption, by which the parts are separated but a little way from each other.

2. The chink, fissure, or vacuity made by disruption; a narrow breach.

Contusions, when great, do usually produce a fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, or in the contrary part. Wifeman.

At length it would crack in many places; and those cracks, as they dilated, would appear of a pretty good, but yet obscure and dark sky-colour. Newton's Opt.

3. The sound of any body bursting or falling.

If I say sooth, I must report, they were

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Now day appears, and with the day the king,

Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest:

Far off the cracks of falling houses ring,

And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast. Dryden.

4. Any sudden and quick sound.

A fourth?—start eye!

What will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shakesp.

Vulcan was employed in hammering out thunderbolts, that every now and then flew up from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 103.

5. Any breach, injury, or diminution; a flaw.

And let us, Paladour, though now our voices

Have got the mannish crack, sing him to th' ground. Shakesp.

I cannot

Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,

So sovereignly being honourable. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

6. Craziness of intellect.

7. A man crazed.

I have invented projects for raising millions, without bur-thening the subject; but cannot get the parliament to listen to me, who look upon me as a crack and a projector. Addis. Spect.

8. A whore; in low language.

9. A boast.

Leafings, backbitings, and vain-glorious cracks,

All those against that fort did bend their batteries. Spenser.

10. A boaster. This is only in low phrase.

TO CRACK. v. a. [kræcken, Dutch.]

1. To break into chinks; to divide the parts a little from each other.

Look to your pipes, and cover them with fresh and warm litter out of the stable, a good thickness, lest the frosts crack them. Mortimer.

2. To break; to split.

O, madam, my heart is crack'd, it's crack'd. Shakespeare.

Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel-eyes. Sh. Rom. and Jul.

Should some wild fig-tree take her native bent,

And heave below the gaudy monument,

Would crack the marble titles, and disperse

The characters of all the lying verse. Dryd. Juv. Sat. 10.

Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings

Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Honour is like that glassy bubble,

That finds philosophers such trouble;

Whose least part crack'd, the whole does fly,

And wits are crack'd to find out why. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.

3. To do any thing with quickness or smartness.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;

He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope's Epist.

4. To break or destroy any thing.

You'll crack a quart together! Ha, will you not? Shakesp.

Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. To craze; to weaken the intellect.

I was ever of opinion, that the philosophers stone, and an holy war, were but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wore their feather in their heads. Bacon's Holy War.

He thought none poets 'till their brains were cracks. Rosc.

To

To CRACK. v. n.

1. To burst; to open in chinks.

By misfortune it cracked in the cooling, whereby we were reduced to make use of one part, which was straight and intire. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. To fall to ruin.

The credit not only of banks, but of exchequers, cracks when little comes in, and much goes out. Dryd. Ded. Æn.

3. To utter a loud and sudden sound.

I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack. Shakespeare.

4. To boast; with of.

To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black.

And since her time are colliers counted bright.

And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.

Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light. Shakesp.

CRACK-BRAINED. adj. [crack and brained.] Crazy; without right reason.

We have sent you an answer to the ill-grounded sophisms of those crack-brained fellows. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

CRACK-HEMP. n. f. [crack and hemp.] A wretch fated to the gallows; a crack-rope. Furcifer.

Come hither, crack-hemp.

——I hope I may chuse, fir.

—Come hither, you rogue:

What, have you forgot me? Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

CRACK-ROPE. n. f. [crack and rope.] A fellow that deserves hanging.

CRA'CKER. n. f. [crack.]

1. A noisy boasting fellow.

What cracker is this fame that deafs our ears

With this abundance of superfluous breath. Shak. K. John.

2. A quantity of gunpowder confined so as to burst with great noise.

The bladder, at its breaking, gave a great report, almost like a cracker. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

And when, for furious haste to run,

They durst not stay to fire a gun,

Have don't with bonfires, and at home

Made squibs and crackers overcome. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 3:

Then furious he begins his march,

Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch,

With squibs and crackers arm'd, to throw

Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.

To CRA'CKLE. v. n. [crack] To make slight cracks; to make small and frequent noises; to decrepitate.

All these motions, which we saw,

Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw. Donne.

I fear to try new love,

As boys to venture on the unknown ice

That crackles underneath them. Dryden.

Caught her dishevell'd hair and rich attire;

Her crown and jewels crackled in the fire. Dryden's Æneid.

Marrow is a specifick in that scurvy which occasions a crackling of the bones; in which case marrow performs its natural function of moistening them. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CRA'CKNEL. n. f. [crack.] A hard brittle cake.

Albee my love he seek with daily sute,

His clownish gifts and curtesies I disdain,

His kids, his cracknels, and his early fruit. Spenser's Past.

Pay tributary cracknels, which he sells;

And with our offerings, help to raise his vails. Dryd. Juv.

CRA'DLE. n. f. [crabel, Saxon.]

1. A moveable bed, on which children or sick persons are agitated with a smooth and equal motion; to make them sleep.

She had indeed, fir, a son for her cradle, e're she had a husband for her bed. Shakespeare's King Lear.

No jutting frieze,

Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird,

Hath made his pendant bed and procreant cradle. Shakesp.

His birth, perhaps, some paltry village hides,

And sets his cradle out of fortune's way. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

A child knows his nurse and his cradle, and by degrees the playthings of a little more advanced age. Locke.

The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh:

To live, is scarce distinguish'd from to die. Prior.

Me let the tender office long engage,

To rock the cradle of reposing age;

With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,

Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death. Pope.

2. It is used for infancy, or the first part of life.

He knew them to be inclined altogether to war, and therefore wholly trained them up, even from their cradles, in arms and military exercises. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The new duke's daughter, her cousin, loves her; being ever, from their cradles, bred together. Shakesp. As you like it.

They should scarcely depart from a form of worship, in which they had been educated from their cradle. Clarendon.

3. [With surgeons.] A case for a broken bone, to keep off pressure.

outside of a ship by the bulge, serving more securely and commodiously to help to launch her. Harris.

To CRA'DLE. v. a. [cradle from the substantive.] To lay in a cradle; to rock in a cradle.

He that hath been cradled in majesty, will not leave the throne to play with beggars. Glanv. Apol.

The tears steal from our eyes, when in the street

With some betrothed virgin's herse we meet;

Or infant's fun'ral from the cheated womb,

Convey'd to earth, and cradled in a tomb. Dryden.

He shall be cradled in my ancient shield, so famous through the universities. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

CRADLE-CLOATHS. n. f. [cradle and cloaths.] Bed-cloaths belonging to a cradle.

O could it be prov'd;

That some night-tripping fairy had exchange'd;

In cradle-cloaths, our children where they lay;

And call mine Piercy, his Plantagenet;

Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. Shakesp. H. IV.

CRAFT. n. f. [cræft, Sax. creft, in old Welsh.]

1. Manual art; trade.

I hear an objection, even from some well-meaning men, that these delightful crafts may be divers ways ill applied. in a land. Wotton's Architecture.

2. Fraud; cunning; artifice.

Th' offence is holy, that she hath committed;

And this deceit loses the name of craft,

Of disobedience, or undutious title. Shakespeare.

This gives us a full view of wonderful art and craft, in raising such a structure of power and iniquity. Ayliffe's Parerg.

3. Small sailing vessels.

To CRAFT. v. n. [craft from the noun.] To play tricks; to practise artifice. Now out of use.

You've made fair hands,

You and your crafts! You've crafted fair. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

CRA'FTILY. adv. [crafty.] Cunningly; artfully; with more art than honesty.

But that which most impaired his credit was the common report that he did, in all things, favour the Christians; and had, for that cause, craftily persuaded Solyman to take in hand the unfortunate Persian war. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

May he not craftily infer

The rules of friendship too severe,

Which chain him to a hated trust;

Which make him wretched to be just? Prior.

CRA'FTINESS. n. f. [crafty.] Cunning; stratagem.

He taketh the wife in their own craftiness. Job, v. 13.

CRA'FTSMAN. n. f. [craft and man.] An artificer; a manufacturer; a mechanick.

 of a very high and craggy mountain. Addison on Italy.

To CRAM. v. a. [cramman, Saxon.]

1. To stuff; to fill with more than can conveniently be held.

As much love in rhyme,
 As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper,
 Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all. Shakespeare.
 Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves were called. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Thou hast spoke as if thy eldest son should be a fool, whose skull Jove cram with brains. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Cram not in people by sending too fast company after company; but so as the number may live well in the plantation, and not by surcharge be in penury. Bacon, Essay 34.

2. To fill with food beyond satiety.

You'd mollify a judge, would cram a squire;
 Or else some smiles from court you may desire. King.

I am sure children would be freer from diseases, if they were not crammed so much as they are by fond mothers, and were kept wholly from flesh the first three years. Locke.

As a man may be eating all day, and, for want of digestion, is never nourished; so these endless readers may cram themselves in vain with intellectual food. Watts's Improvement.

But Annius, crafty feer,
 Came cramm'd with capon, from where Pollio dines. Dunciad.
 3. To thrust in by force.

You cram these words into mine ears, against
 The stomach of my sense. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Huffer, quoth Hudibras, this sword

 Scolds with her maid, or with her chaplain crams.
Pope's Epilogue to Jane Shore.

CRA'MBO. n. f. [a cant word, probably without etymology.] A play at which one gives a word, to which another finds a rhyme; a rhyme.

So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull
 To celebrate some suburb trull,
 His similes in order set,
 And ev'ry crambo he could get. Swift.

CRAMP. n. f. [krampe, Dut. crampe, French.]

1. A spasm or contraction of the limbs, generally removed by warmth and rubbing.

For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramp,
 Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up. Shakespeare. Tempest.

In a retreat, he outruns any lacquey; marry, in coming on,
 he has the cramp. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

The cramp, no doubt, cometh of contraction of sinews;
 which is manifest, in that it cometh either by cold or dryness.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 964.

Hares, said to live on hemlock, do not make good the tradition; and he that observes what vertigoes, cramps, and convulsions follow thereon, in these animals, will be of our belief. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 27.

2. A restriction; a confinement; obstruction; shackle.

A narrow fortune is a cramp to a great mind, and lays a man under incapacities of serving his friend. L'Esfrange.

3. A piece of iron bent at each end, by which two bodies are held together.

To the uppermost of these there should be fastened a sharp grapple, or cramp of iron, which may be apt to take hold of any place where it lights. Wilkins's Mathem. Magick.

CRAMP. adj. Difficult; knotty: a low term.

To CRAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

 A wat'rish humour swell'd, and coz'd again. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To restrain; to confine; to obstruct; to hinder.

It is impossible to conceive the number of inconveniences that will ensue, if borrowing be cramped. Bacon, Essay 42.

There are few but find that some companies benumb and cramp them, so that in them they can neither speak nor do any thing that is handsome. Glanville's Sceff. c. 24.

He, who serves, has still restraints of dread upon his spirits, which, even in the midst of action, cramps and ties up his activity. South's Sermons.

C R A

Dr. Hammond loves to contract and cramp the sense of prophecies. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The antiquaries are for cramping their subjects into as narrow a space as they can, and for reducing the whole extent of a science into a few general maxims. Addison on Italy.

Marius used all endeavours for depressing the nobles, and raising the people; particularly for cramping the former in their power of judicature. Swift on the Dissent. in Ath. and Rome.

No more
 Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold,
 But full of life, and vivifying soul. Thomson's Spring.

3. To bind with crampirons.

CRA'NAGE. n. f. [cranagium, low Latin.] A liberty to use a crane for drawing up wares from the vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it. It signifies also the money paid and taken for the same. Cowel.

CRANE. n. f. [cpan, Sax. kraen, Dutch.]

1. A bird with a long beak.

Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter. If. xlviii. 14.

That small infantry warr'd on by cranes. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. An instrument made with ropes, pullies, and hooks, by which great weights are raised.

In case the mould about it be so ponderous as not to be removed by any ordinary force, you may then raise it with a crane. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

Then commerce brought into the publick walk
 The busy merchant, the big warehouse built,
 Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson's Autumn.

3. A siphon; a crooked pipe for drawing liquors out of a cask.

CRANES-BILL. n. f. [from crane and bill.]

1. An herb.

The leaves are conjugate: the cup consists of one leaf, divided into five parts, expanded in form of a star: the flowers consist of five leaves, somewhat resembling a crested or lipped flower, with ten stamina surrounding the ovary. The fruit is of a pentagonal figure, with a beak, containing five seed-vessels, in each of which is one tailed seed, which, when ripe, is cast forth by the twisting of the beak. It is common in several parts of England, growing in almost any soil or situation. Miller.

2. A pair of pincers terminating in a point, used by surgeons.

CRANIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The skull.

In wounds made by contusion, when the cranium is a little naked, you ought not presently to croud in dressings; for if that contused flesh be well digested, the bone will incarn with the wound without much difficulty. Wise's Surgery.

CRANK. n. f. [This word is perhaps a contraction of crane-neck, to which it may bear some resemblance, and is part of the instrument called a crane.]

1. A crank is the end of an iron axis turned square down, and again turned square to the first turning down; so that, on the last turning down, a leather thong is slip to tread the treddle-wheel about. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

2. Any bending or winding passage.

I send it through the rivers of your blood,
 Even to the court, the heart; to th' seat o' th' brain;
 And, through the cranks and offices of man,
 The strongest nerves, and small inferiour veins,
 From me receive that natural competency,
 Whereby they live. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Any conceit formed by twisting or changing, in any manner, the form or meaning of a word.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
 Jest and youthful jollity,
 Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
 Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles,
 Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
 And love to live in dimple sleek. Milton.

CRANK. adj. [from onkrank, Dutch. Skinver.]

1. Healthy; sprightly: sometimes corrupted to cranky.

They looken bigge, as bulls that been bate,
 And bearen the cragg so stiff and so state,
 As cockle, on his dunghil crowing cranke. Spenfer's Past.

2. Among sailors, a ship is said to be crank, when, by the form of its bottom, or by being loaded too much above, it is liable to be overfet. [from krank, Dut. sick.]

To CRA'NKLE. v. n. [from crank.] To run in and out; to run in flexures and windings.

See how this river comes me crankling in,
 And cuts me from the best of all my land,
 A huge half-moon, a monstrous cattle out. Shak. Hen IV.

To CRA'NKLE. v. a. To break into unequal surfaces; to break into angles.

Old Vaga's stream,
 Forc'd by the sudden shock, her wonted track
 Forsook, and drew her humid train aslope, Crankling her banks. Philips.

CRA'NKLES.

CRA'NKLES. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequalities; angular prominences.

CRA'NKNESS. n. f. [from crank.]

1. Health; vigour.
2. Disposition to overfet.

CRA'NNIED. adj. [from cranny.] Full of chinks.

A wall it is, as I would have you think,

That had in it a crannied hole or chink.

Shakespeare.

A very fair fruit, and not unlike a citron; but somewhat rougher chopt and crannied, vulgarly conceived the marks of Adam's teeth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 1.

CRA'NNY. n. f. [cren, Fr. crena, Latin.] A chink; a cleft; a fissure.

The eye of the understanding is like the eye of the sense; for as you may see great objects through small crannies or holes, so you may see great axioms of nature through small and contemptible instances. Bacon's Natural History, No. 91.

And therefore beat, and laid about,

To find a cranny to creep out. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, but with brick or stone, fitted to the crannies.

Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

Within the soaking of water and springs, with streams and currents in the veins and crannies. Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.

He slipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garrets, and he peeped into every cranny.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

CRAPE. n. f. [crepa, low Latin.] A thin stuff, loosely woven, of which the dress of the clergy is sometimes made.

And proud Roxana, fir'd with jealous rage,

With fifty yards of crave shall sweep the stage.

Swift.

Nor thou, lord Arthur, shall escape:

To thee I often call'd in vain,

Against that assassin in crave;

Yet thou could'st tamely see me slain.

Swift.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn;

A saint in crave, is twice a faint in lawn. Pope, Epistle i.

CRA'PULENCE. n. f. [crapula, a surfeit, Latin.] Drunkenness; sickness by intemperance.

Dict.

CRA'PULOUS. adj. [crapulosus, Lat.] Drunken; intemperate; sick with intemperance.

Dict.

TO CRASH. v. n. [a word probably formed from the thing.]

1. To make a loud complicated noise, as of many things falling or breaking at once.

There shall be a great crashing from the hills. Zeph. i. 10.

When convulsions cleave the lab'ring earth,

Before the dismal yawn appears, the ground

Trembles and heaves, the nodding houses crash.

Smith.

TO CRASH. v. a. To break or bruise.

My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montague, I pray you come and crash a cup of wine.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Mr. Warburton has it, crush a cup of wine.

To crash, says Hannet, is to be merry: a crash being a word still used in some counties for a merry bout.

It is surely better to read crack. See CRACK.

CRASH. n. f. [from the verb.] A loud sudden mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Senseless Ilium,

Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top

Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash,

Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Moralizing fat I by the hazard-table: I look'd upon the uncertainty of riches, the decay of beauty, and the crash of worlds, with as much contempt as ever Plato did.

Pope.

CRA'SIS. n. f. [crasis, Gr.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The fancies of men are so immediately diversified by the individual crasis, that every man owns something wherein none is like him.

Glanville's Sceps. c. 15.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger, as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crasis, and constitution of the blood and spirits.

South's Sermons.

CRASS. adj. [crassus, Latin.] Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it.

Woodward's Natural History.

CRA'SSITUDE. n. f. [crassitudo, Latin.] Grossness; coarseness; thickness.

They must be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper or parchment; for if they have a greater crassitude, they will alter in their own body, though they spend not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The Dead Sea, which vomiteth up bitumen, is of that crassitude, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been born up, and not sunk. Bacon's Natural History.

The terrestrial matter carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained therein partly by the greater crassitude and gravity of the sea-water, and partly by its constant agitation. Woodward.

CRASINA'TION. n. f. [from crassino, Latin, to-morrow.] Delay. Dict.

CRATCH. n. f. [creche, French; crates, Latin.] The palisaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

When being expelled out of Paradise, by reason of sin, thou wert held in the chains of death; I was inclosed in the virgin's womb, I was laid in the cratch, I was wrapped in swathing-cloaths.

Hakewill on Providence.

CRAVA'T. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.] A neck-cloth; any thing worn about the neck.

Less delinquents have been scourg'd,

And hemp on wooden anvils forg'd;

Which others for cravats have worn

About their necks, and took a turn. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

The restrictives were applied, one over another, to her throat: then we put her on a cravat.

Wifeman's Surgery.

TO CRAVE. v. a. [cravian, Saxon.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands?

Hooker.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;

But for the mutable rank-scented many,

Let them regard me as I do not flatter. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

The poor people not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend the forbearance too of any action proposed.

Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,

Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves. Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd; the more their princes gave,

Th' advantage only took the more to crave.

Denham.

Him dost thou mean, who, spite of all his store,

Is ever craving, and will still be poor?

Who cheats for halfpence; and who doffs his coat,

To save a farthing in a ferry-boat. Dryden's Pers. Sat. iv.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety. L'Estr.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it, by some wicked action.

South's Sermons.

4. To call for importunately.

Our good old friend,

Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow

Your needful counsel to our businesses,

Which crave the instant use. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution, are acids, taken in too great quantities; four eructations, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,

But more would prove

This heart too little, that too great.

Suckling.

CRA'VEN. n. f. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.]

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a cockcomb?—

—A comble's cock, so Kate will be my hen.

—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven. Shakespeare.

2. A coward; a recreant.

Upon his coward breast

A bloody cross, and on his craven crest

A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?—

—He is a craven and a villain else. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Whether it be

Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,

Of thinking too precisely on th' event;

A thought, which quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And ever three parts coward. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find

From cowardice, not ruth did that proceed;

His noble foes durst not his craven kind

Exasperate by such a bloody deed. Fairfax, b. i. Stan. 88.

TO CRA'VEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly. Hannet.

'Gainst self-slaughter

There is a prohibition so divine,

That cravens my weak hand.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

CRA'VER. n. f. [from crave.] A weak-hearted spiritless fellow. It is used in Clarissa.

TO CRAUNCH. v. a. [schrantzen, Dutch; whence the vulgar say more properly to scraunch.] To crush in the mouth. The word is used by Swift.

CRAW. n. f. [kroe, Danish.] The crop or first stomach of birds.

C R A

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or crawl, or at least into a kind of ante-stomach, which I have observed in many, especially piscivorous birds. Ray on the Creation.

CRA'WFISH. n. f. [sometimes written crayfish, properly crevice; in French ecrevisse.] A small crustaceous fish found in brooks; the small lobster of fresh water.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

Let me to crack live crawfish recommend. Pope's Hor. Im.

The common crawfish, and the large sea crawfish, both produce the stones called crabs-eyes. In part of June, in July, and part of August, this animal not only casts its shell, but its very stomach is also consumed and digested, by a new one growing in its place. Hill on the Materia Medica.

To CRAWL. v. n. [krielen, Dutch.]

1. To creep; to move with a slow motion; to move without rising from the ground, as a worm.

That crawling insect, who from mud began;

Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Dryd. Auren.

The streams but just contain'd within their bounds,

By slow degrees into their channels crawl;

And earth increases as the waters fall. Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 8.

The vile worm, that yesterday began

To crawl; thy fellow-creature, abject man! Prior.

2. To move weakly, and slowly.

'Tis our first intent

To shake all cares and business from our age,

While we unburthen'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakesp. K. Lear.

They like tall fellows crept out of the holes; and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Knolles.

A look so pale no quartane ever gave;

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave. Dryd. Juvenal.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business. Arbuthn. History of John Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,

Vile reptile, weak and vain!

A while he crawls upon the earth,

Then shrinks to earth again. Swift.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time. Swift.

3. To move about hated and despised.

Cranmer

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,

And is his oracle. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Reflect upon that litter of absurd opinions that crawl about the world, to the disgrace of reason. South's Sermons.

How will the condemned sinner then crawl forth, and appear in his filth and shame, before that undefiled tribunal? South's Sermons.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace

Has made the father of a nameless race,

Crawl through the street, shov'd on, or rudely press'd

By his own sons, that pass him by unblest! Pope, Epist. i.

CRA'WLER. n. f. [from crawl.] A creeper; any thing that creeps.

CRA'YFISH. n. f. [See CRAWFISH] The river lobster.

The cure of the muriatick and armoniack saltiness requires to use slimy meats; as snails, tortoises, jellies, and crayfishes. Floyer on the Humours.

CRA'YON. n. f. [crayon, French.]

1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line; that is to say, without working, without giving some strokes of the pencil or the crayon. Dryden's Dufrenoy.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon.

To CRAZE. v. a. [ecraser, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.

In this consideration the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of Popish parents, doth seem crazed. Hook.

Relent, sweet Hermia; and, Lyfander, yield

Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shakespeare.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,

God looking forth, will trouble all his host,

And craze their chariot-wheels. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xii.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruisseth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,

No father his son dearer: true, to tell thee,

That grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits, only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

CRA'ZEDNESS. n. f. [from crazed.] Decrepitude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

C R E

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker, Preface.

CRA'ZINESS. n. f. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecillity; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecrasè, French.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,

We will bestow you in some better place;

Fitter for sickness and for crazy age. Shakesp. Henry VI.

When people are crazy, and in disorder, it is natural for them to groan. L'Estrange.

2. Broken witted; shattered in the intellect.

The queen of night, whose large command

Rules all the sea and half the land,

And over moist and crazy brains,

In high spring-tides, at midnight reigns. Hudibras, p. iii.

3. Weak; feeble; shattered.

Physick can but mend our crazy state,

Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden's Fables.

Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a crazy constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered. Wake.

CREAGHT. n. f. [an Irish word.]

In these fast places they kept their creaghts, or herds of cattle, living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage. Davies on Ireland.

To CREAK. v. n. [corrupt from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. Shakespeare's King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,

On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryd. Fables.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,

They fry'd with heat, and I with fierce desire. Dryd. Virgil.

CREAM. n. f. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,

Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,

That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakespeare.

I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Cream is matured and made to rise more speedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 314.

How the drudging goblin swet,

To earn his cream-bowl duly set;

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,

His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn. Milton.

Let your various creams incircled be

With swelling fruit, just ravish'd from the tree. King.

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream, and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor called skimmed milk. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It is used for the best part of any thing; as, the cream of a jest.

To CREAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather cream.

There are a sort of men, whose visages

Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;

And do a wilful stiffness entertain,

With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion

Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

To CREAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To skim off the cream.

2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing: so used somewhere by Swift.

CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and faced.] Pale; coward-looking.

Thou cream-fac'd lown,

Where got'st thou that goose-look. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CRE'AMY. adj. [from cream.] Full of cream; having the nature of cream.

CRE'ANCE. n. f. [French.] Is, in falconry, a fine small line, fastened to a hawk's leash when she is first lured.

CREASE. n. f. [from creta, Latin, chalk. Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp penknife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. Swift.

To CREASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

To CREA'TE. v. a. [creo, Latin.]

C R E

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.
In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.
We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of.
Locke.
  2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion.
Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland
Would create foldiers, and make women fight,
'To doff their dire distresses. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies.
King Charles.
They eclipse the clearest truths, by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light.
Decay of Piety.
None knew, 'till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were. Roscommon.
Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate? Dryd. Aurengz.
Long abstinence is troublesome to acid constitutions, by the uneasiness it creates in the stomach. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
  3. To beget.
And the issue there create,
Ever shall be fortunate. Shakesp. Midsummer-Night's Dream.
  4. To invest with any new character.
Arise my knights of the battle: I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
  5. To give any new qualities; to put any thing in a new state.
The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron.
Davies on Ireland.
- CREA'TION. n. f. [from create.]
1. The act of creating or conferring existence.
Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his conservation of us.
Taylor.
2. The act of investing with new qualities or character; as, the creation of peers.
  3. The things created; the universe.
As subjects then, the whole creation came;
And from their natures Adam them did name. Denham.
Such was the saint, who shone with ev'ry grace,
Reflecting, Moses like, his master's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as his creation bless'd. Dryden's Fables.
Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year. Dryden's Virgil.
In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men. Parnel.
  4. Any thing produced, or caused.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation, Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain? Shakesp. Macbeth.
- CREA'TIVE. adj. [from create.]
1. Having the power to create.
2. Exerting the act of creation.
To trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry.
South's Sermons.
But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative beauty burns
With warmest beam. Thomson's Spring.
- CREA'TOR. n. f. [creator, Latin.] The being that bestows existence.
Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
The great creator, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world Milt. Parad. Lost.
When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
- CREA'TURE. n. f. [creatura, low Latin.]
1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.
Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the Creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures.
Stillington's Defence of Discourse on Rom. Idol.
2. Any thing created.
God's first creature was light. Bacon's New Atlantis.
Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be. Tillotson, Sermon i.
  3. An animal not human.
The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
  4. A general term for man.
Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self-sake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Fairy Queen, b. i.

C R E

- Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo Tantalus, I here tormented lye. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 7.
Though he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.
- 5: A word of contempt for a human being.
Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;
Is this a holiday? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
He would into the stews,
And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour. Shakespeare's Richard III.
I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Nor think to-night of thy ill-nature,
But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.
A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.
  6. A word of petty tenderness.
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creature, and then kiss me hard. Shakespeare.
Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise?
The gods, to live in woods, have left the skies. Dryd. Virg.
Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets. Watts.
  7. A person who owes his rise or his fortune to another.
He sent to colonel Massey to send him men, which he,
being a creature of Essex's, refused. Clarendon.
The duke's creature he desired to be esteemed. Clarendon.
Great princes thus, when favourites they raise,
To justify their grace, their creatures praise. Dryd. Aurengz.
The design was discovered by a person whom every body knows to be the creature of a certain great man. Swift.
- CREA'TURELY. adj. [from creature.] Having the qualities of a creature.
The several parts of relatives, or creaturely infinities, may have finite proportions to one another. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
- CRE'BRITUDE. n. f. [from creber, frequent, Latin.] Frequentness.
Dict.
- CRE'BROUS. adj. [from creber, Latin.] Frequent. Dict.
- CRE'DENCE. n. f. [from credo, Lat. credence, Norman Fr.]
1. Belief; credit.
Ne let it seem, that credence this exceeds;
For he that made the same was known right well,
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 7. stan. 36.
Love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl, but the triar, finding some credence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon's H. VII.
2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.
After they had delivered to the king their letters of credence, they were led to a chamber richly furnished. Hayward.
- CRE'DENDA. n. f. [Latin.] Things to be believed; articles of faith; distinguished in theology from agenda, or practical duties.
These were the great articles and credenda of Christianity, that so much startled the world. South's Sermons.
- CRE'DENT. adj. [credens, Latin.]
1. Believing; easy of belief.
Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list' his songs. Shakesp. Hamlet.
2. Having credit; not to be questioned.
My authority bears a credent bulk,
That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
- CRE'DENTIAL. n. f. [from credens, Latin.] That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.
A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shown undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message. Addison on the Christian Religion.
- CREDIBI'LITY. n. f. [from credible.] Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.
The first of those opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable. Tillotson, Sermon i.
Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth the other. Atterbury.
- CRE'DIBLE. adj. [credibilis, Latin.] Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.
The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known-condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.
None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson, Preface.
- CRE'DIBLENESS.

CRE

CRE'DIBLENESS. n. f. [from credible.] Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.

The credibleness of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practiser of physick in the East Indies.

Boyle's History of Funniness.

CRE'DIBLY. adv. [from credible.] In a manner that claims belief.

This, with the loss of so few of the English as is scarce credible, being, as hath been rather confidently than credibly reported, but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

CREDIT. n. f. [credit, French.]

1. Belief.

When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them. 1 Mac. x. 46.

I may give credit to reports. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 130.

Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,

To maids alone and children are reveal'd:

What though no credit doubting wits may give,

The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope's Ra. of Lock.

2. Honour; reputation.

I published, because I was told I might please such as it was a credit to please. Pope.

3. Esteem; good opinion.

There is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.

His learning, though a poet said it,

Before a play, would lose no credit.

Swift.

Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave,

Shall walk the world in credit to his grave. Pope's Her. b. ii.

4. Faith; testimony.

We are contented to take this upon your credit, and to think it may be. Hooker, b. iv. sect. 12.

The things which we properly believe, be only such as are received upon the credit of divine testimony. Hooker, b. v.

The author would have done well to have left so great a paradox only to the credit of a single assertion. Locke.

5. Trust repofed.

Credit is nothing but the expectation of money, within some limited time. Locke.

6. Promise given.

They have never thought of violating the publick credit, or of alienating the revenues to other uses than to what they have been thus assigned. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

7. Influence; power not compulsive; interest.

She employed his uttermost credit to relieve us, which was as great as a beloved son with a mother. Sidney.

They sent him likewise a copy of their supplication to the king, and desired him to use his credit that a treaty might be entered into. Clarendon, b. ii.

Having credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, he troubled not himself for that of other men. Claren.

TO CRE'DIT. v. a. [credo, Latin.]

1. To believe.

Now I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do presage. Shakesp. Jul. Caf.

To credit the unintelligibility both of this union and motion, we need no more than to consider it. Glanv. Sceps. c. 4.

2. To procure credit or honour to any thing.

May here her monument stand so,

To credit this rude age; and show

To future times, that even we

Some patterns did of virtue see. Waller.

It was not upon design to credit these papers, nor to compliment a society so much above flattery. Glanv. Sceps. Pref.

At present you credit the church as much by your government, as you did the school formerly by your wit. South.

3. To trust; to confide in.

4. To admit as a debtor.

CRE'DITABLE. adj. [from credit.]

1. Reputable; above contempt.

He settled him in a good creditable way of living, having procured him by his interest one of the best places of the country. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. Honourable; estimable.

The contemplation of things, that do not serve to promote our happiness, is but a more specious and ingenious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of ignorance. Tillotson, Sermon i.

CRE'DITABLENESS. n. f. [from creditable.] Reputation; estimation.

Among all these snares, there is none more entangling than the *creditable*ness and repute of customary vices. Decay of Piety.

CRE'DITABLY. adv. [from creditable.] Reputably; without disgrace.

Many will chuse rather to neglect their duty safely and creditably, than to get a broken pate in the church's service, only to be rewarded with that which will break their hearts too. South's Sermons.

CRE'DITOR. n. f. [creditor, Latin.] He to whom a debt is owed; he that gives credit: correlative to debtor.

CRE

There came divers of Anthonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot chuse but break. Shakespeare.

I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner, with regard to heaven and my own soul. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 549.

No man of honour, as that word is usually understood, did ever pretend that his honour obliged him to be chaste or temperate, to pay his creditors, to be useful to his country, to do good to mankind, to endeavour to be wise or learned, to regard his word, his promise, or his oath. Swift.

CREDU'LITY. n. f. [credulité, French; credulitas, Latin.] Easiness of belief; readiness of credit.

The poor Plangus, being subject to that only disadvantage of honest hearts, credulity, was persuaded by him. Sidney.

The prejudice of credulity may, in some measure, be cured by learning to set a high value on truth. Watts's Logick.

CRE'DULOUS. adj. [credulus, Latin.] Apt to believe; unsuspecting; easily deceived.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,

Whose nature is so far from doing harm,

That he suspects none. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CRE'DULOUSNESS. n. f. [from credulous.] Aptness to believe; credulity.

CREED. n. f. [from credo, the first word of the apostles creed.]

1. A form of words in which the articles of faith are comprehended.

The larger and fuller view of this foundation is set down in the creeds of the church. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Will they, who decry creeds and creedmakers, say that one who writes a treatise of morality ought not to make in it any collection of moral precepts? Fiddes's Sermons.

2. Any solemn profession of principles or opinion.

For me, my lords,

I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed. Shakesp.

TO CREEK. v. a. [See TO CREAK.] To make a harsh noise.

Shall I stay here,

Creeking my shoes on the plain masonry. Shakespeare.

CREEK. n. f. [cnecca, Sax. kreke, Dutch.]

1. A prominence or jut in a winding coast.

As streams, which with their winding banks do play,

Stopp'd by their creeks, run softly through the plain. Davies.

They on the bank of Jordan, by a creek,

Where winds with reeds and osiers whisp'ring play,

Their unexpected loss and complaints outbreath'd. Parad. Reg.

2. A small port; a bay; a cove.

A law was made here to stop their passage in every port and creek. Davies on Ireland.

3. Any turn, or alley.

A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper; one that commands

The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shakesp.

CRE'EKY. adj. [from creek.] Full of creeks; unequal; winding.

Who, leaning on the belly of a pot,

Pour'd forth a water, whose outgushing flood

Ran bathing all the creeky shore a-flot,

Whereon the Trojan prince spilt Turnus' blood. Spenser.

TO CREEP. v. n. [preter. crept; crypan, Sax. krepan, Germ.]

1. To move with the belly to the ground without legs; as a worm.

Ye that walk

The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep! Milt. Pa. Lost.

And every creeping thing that creeps the ground. Miltm.

If they cannot distinguish creeping from flying, let them lay down Virgil, and take up Ovid de Ponto. Dryd. Dedicat. En.

2. To grow along the ground, or on other supports.

The grottos cool, with shady poplars crown'd,

And creeping vines on arbours weav'd around. Dryden.

3. To move forward without bounds or leaps; as insects.

4. To move slowly and feebly.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,

Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,

To the last syllable of recorded time. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Why should a man

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice

By being peevish? Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

He who creeps after plain, dull, common sense, is safe from committing absurdities; but can never reach the excellence of wit. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

5. To move secretly and clandestinely.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—

—There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln-hole. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Whate'er you are,

That in this desert inaccessible,

Under the shade of melancholy boughs,

Loss and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shakespeare.

Of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women. 2 Tim. iii. 6.

Thou makest darkness, and it is night wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth. Psal. civ. 20.

Now

Now and then a work or two has crept in to keep his first design in countenance. Atterbury.

6. To move timorously without soaring, or venturing into dangers.

Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when it is evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

We here took a little boat, to creep along the sea-shore as far as Genoa. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

7. To come unexpected; to steal forward unheard and unseen.

By those gifts of nature and fortune he creeps, say he flies, into the favour of poor silly women. Sidney, b. ii.

It seems, the marriage of his brother's wife Has crept too near his conscience.

—No, his conscience Has crept too near another lady. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Necessity enforced them, after they grew full of people, to spread themselves, and creep out of Shinar, or Babylonia. Raleigh's History.

TO CRITICISE. v. n. [from critick.]

1. To play the critick; to judge; to write remarks upon any performance of literature; to point out faults and beauties.

They who can criticise so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write severely with more ease than I can gently. Dryden.

Know well each ancient's proper character,
 Without all this at once before your eyes,
 Cavil you may, but never criticise. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

2. To animadvert upon as faulty.

Nor would I have his father look so narrowly into these accounts, counts, as to take occasion from thence to criticise on his expences. Locke.

TO CRITICISE. v. a. [from critick.] To censure; to pass judgment upon.

Nor shall I look upon it as any breach of charity to criticise the author, so long as I keep clear of the person. Addison.

CRITICISM. n. f. [from critick.]

1. Criticism, as it was first instituted by Aristotle, was meant a standard of judging well. Dryden's Innocence, Pref.
2. Remark; animadversion; critical observations.

There is not a Greek or Latin critick who has not shewn, even in the stile of his criticisms, that he was a master of all the eloquence and delicacy of his native tongue. Addis. Spect.

TO CROAK. v. n. [cpacezzan, Saxon; crocere, Italian; crocitare, Latin.]

1. To make a hoarse low noise, like a frog.

The subtle swallow flies about the brook,
And querulous frogs in muddy pools do croak. May's Virgil.
So when Jove's block descended from on high,
Loud thunder to its bottom shook the bog,
And the hoarse nation croak'd. Pope's Dunciad, b. i. l. 264.
Blood, stuff'd in skins, is British christians food;
And France robs marshes of the croaking brood. Gay.

2. To caw or cry as a raven or crow.

The raven himself not hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The hoarse raven, on the blasted bough,
By croaking from the left, presag'd the coming blow. Dryd.
At the same time the walk of elms, with the croaking of the ravens, looks exceeding solemn and venerable. Addis. Spectat.

3. It may be used in contempt for any disagreeable or offensive murmur.

Their understandings are but little instructed, when all their whole time and pains is laid out to still the croaking of their own bellies. Locke.

CROAK. n. f. from the verb.] The cry or voice of a frog or raven.

The swallow skims the river's watry face,
The frogs renew the croaks of their loquacious race. Dryd.
Was that a raven's croak, or my son's voice?

No matter which, I'll to the grave and hide me. Lee's Oed.

CRO'CEOUS. adj. [crocceus, Latin.] Consisting of saffron; like saffron. Dict.

CRO'CKERY. n. f. Earthen ware.

CRO'CODILE. n. f. [from κρόκος, saffron, and δειλων, fearing.]

An amphibious voracious animal, in shape resembling a lizard, and found in Egypt and the Indies. It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty, be pierced; except under the belly, where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with several rows of teeth, sharp and separated, which enter one another. Though its four legs are very short, it runs with great swiftness; but does not easily turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to its death; but this is not probable. Some are fifteen or eighteen cubits long. Its sight is very piercing upon the ground, but in the water it sees but dimly; and it is said to spend the four winter months under water. When its bowels are taken out, or it is wounded, it smells very agreeably. Crocodiles lay their eggs, resembling goose-eggs, sometimes amounting to sixty, on the sand near the waterside, covering them with the sand, that the heat of the sun may contribute to hatch them. The Ichneumon, or Indian rat, which is as large as a tame cat, is said to break the crocodile's eggs whenever it finds them; and also, that it gets into the very belly of this creature, while it is asleep with its throat open, gnaws its entrails, and kills it. Calmet.

Glo'ster's show

Beguiles him; as the mournful crocodile,
With sorrow, snares relenting passengers. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Crocodiles were thought to be peculiar unto the Nile. Brown.

Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep. Dryden.

Enticing crocodiles, whose tears are death;

Syrens, that murder with enchanting breath. Granville.

Crocodile is also a little animal, otherwise called stinx, very much like the lizard, or small crocodile. It lives by land and water; has four short small legs, a very sharp muzzle, and a short small tail. It is pretty enough to look at, being covered all over with little scales of the colour of silver, intermixt with brown, and of a gold colour upon the back. It always remains little, and is found in Egypt near the Red Sea, in Lybia, and in the Indies. Trevoux.

CRO'CODILINE. adj. [crocodilinus, Lat.] Like a crocodile. Dict.

CRO'CUS. n. f.

The best place to plant the Spring crocus's is close to a wall, or on the edge of boarded borders round a garden, mingling the colour of those of a season together. The seed must be kept in the husk 'till sown, and a light rich ground should be chosen for them. They must not be placed too thick: they may be increased also by off-sets. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Fair handed Spring unbosoms every grace,

Throws out the snow-drop and the crocus first. Thomson.

CROFT. n. f. [cnoft, Saxon.] A little close joining to a house, that is used for corn or pasture.

This have I learn'd,

Tending my flocks hard by, i' th' hilly crofts

That brow this bottom glade. Milton.

CROISA'DE. } n. f. [croisade, Fr. from croix, a cross.] A holy CROISA'DO. } war; a war carried on against infidels under the banner of the cross.

See that he take the name of Urban, because a pope of that name did first institute the croisado; and, as with an holy trumpet, did stir up the voyage for the Holy Land. Bacon.

CRO'ISES. n. f.

1. Pilgrims who carry a cross.
2. Soldiers who fight against infidels under the banner of the cross.

1. An old ewe.

2. In contempt, an old woman.

Take up the bastard;

Take't up, I say; give't to thy crone. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The crone being in bed with him on the wedding-night, and finding his aversion, endeavours to win his affection by reason. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

CRO'NET. n. f. The hair which grows over the top of an horse's hoof.

CRO'NY. n. f. [a cant word.] An old acquaintance; a companion of long standing.

So when the Scots, your constant cronies,

Th' espousers of your cause and monies. Hudibras, p. iii.

To oblige your crony Swift,

Bring our dame a new year's gift. Swift.

Strange, an astrologer should die,

Without one wonder in the sky!

Not one of all his crony stars,

To pay their duty at his herse?

Swift.

CROOK. n. f. [croc, French.]

1. Any crooked or bent instrument.
2. A sheephook.

He left his crook, he left his flocks,

And wand'ring through the lonely rocks,

He nourish'd endless woe. Prior.

3. Any thing bent; a meander.

There fall those saphire-colour'd brooks,

Which, conduit like, with curious crooks,

Sweet islands make in that sweet land. Sidney, b. ii.

TO CROOK. v. a. [crocher, French.]

1. To bend; to turn into a hook.

It is highly probable, that this disease proceeds from a redundant acidity, because vinegar will soften and crook tender bones. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To pervert from rectitude; to divert from the original end.

Whatever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state. Bacon, Essay 24.

CRO'OKBACK. n. f. [crook and back.] A term of reproach for a man that has gibbous shoulders.

Ay, crookback, here I stand to answer thee,

Or any he the proudest of thy sort. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

CRO'OKBACKED. adj. Having bent shoulders.

A dwarf as well may for a giant pass,

As negroe for a swan; a crookback'd lass

Be call'd Europa. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 8.

There are millions of truths that a man is not, or may not think himself, concerned to know; as, whether our king Richard III. was crookbacked or no. Locke.

CROO'KED. adj. [crocher, French.]

1. Bent; not strait; curve.

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill, which intercepts the sight of the sounding body; and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked pipes as through straight ones. Newton's Opt.

Mathematicians say of a straight line, that it is as well an index of its own rectitude as of the obliquity of a crooked one. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Winding; oblique; anfractuons.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where-ever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.

Among the crooked lanes, on every hedge,

The glow-worm lights his gem. Thomson's Summer.

3. Perverse; untoward; without rectitude of mind; given to obliquity of conduct.

They have corrupted themselves: they are a perverse and crooked generation. Deutr. xxxii. 5.

Hence, heap of wrath; foul, indigested lump!

As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

We were not born crooked; we learned those windings and turnings of the serpent. South's Sermons.

CROOKEDLY. adv. [from crooked.]

1. Not in a straight line.
2. Untowardly; not compliantly.

If we walk perversely with God, he will walk crookedly towards us. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

CROOKEDNESS. n. f. [from crooked.]

1. Deviation from straightness; curvity; the state of being inflected; inflection.

He that knoweth what is straight, doth even thereby discern what is crooked; because the absence of straightness, in bodies capable thereof, is crookedness. Hooker.

2. Deformity of a gibbous body.

When the heathens offered a sacrifice to their false gods, they would make a severe search to see if there were any crookedness or spot, any uncleanness or deformity, in their sacrifice. Taylor's Worthly Communicant.

CROP. n. f. [crop, Saxon.] The craw of a bird; the first stomach into which her meat descends.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw.

Ray on the Creation.

But flutt'ring there, they nestle near the throne,

And lodge in habitations not their own,

By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

CROPPFULL. adj. [crop and full.] Satiated; with a full belly.

He stretch'd out all the chimney's length,

Basks at the fire his hairy strength;

And, crop-full, out of door he flings,

'Ere the first cock his matin rings. Milton.

CROPPSICK. adj. [crop and sick.] Sick with repletion; sick with excess and debauchery.

Strange odds! where crop-sick drunkards must engage

A hungry foe, and arm'd with sober rage. Tate's Juv. Sat.

CROP. n. f. [croppa, Saxon.]

1. The highest part or end of any thing; as the head of a tree, the ear of corn.
2. The harvest; the corn gathered off a field; the product of the field.

And this of all my harvest hope I have,

Nought reaped but a weedy crop of care. Spenser's Past.

Lab'ring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,

Corn, wine, and oil. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,

That sacred stream, should never water weeds,

Nor make the crop of thorns and thistles grow. Roscommon.

Nothing is more prejudicial to your crop than mowing of it too soon, because the sap is not fully come out of the root.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Any thing cut off.

Guiltless of steel, and from the razor free,

It falls a plenteous crop reserv'd for thee. Dryden's Fables.

To CROP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut off the ends of any thing; to mow; to reap; to lop.

Crop'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;

Of England's coat, one half is cut away. Shakef. Hen. VI.

He, upon whose side

The fewest roses are crop'd from the tree,

Shall yield the other in the right opinion. Shakef. Henry VI.

All the budding honours on thy crest

I'll crop, to make a garland for my head. Shakef. Henry IV.

I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent.

Ezek. xvii. 22.

There are some tears of trees, which are combed from the beards of goats; for when the goats bite and crop them, especially in the mornings, the dew being on, the tear cometh forth, and hangeth upon their beards. Bacon's Natural History.

O Fruit divine!

Sweet of thyself, but much more sweet thus crop'd. Milton.

Age, like ripe apples, on earth's bosom drops;

While force our youth, like fruits, untimely crops. Denham.

Death destroys

The parent's hopes, and crops the growing boys. Creech.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb

The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme! Dryd. Virgil.

To CROP. v. n. To yield harvest.

Royal wench!

She made great Cæsar lay his sword to-bed;

He plough'd her, and she cropt. Shakef. Anth. and Cleopatra.

CROPPER. n. f. [from crop.] A kind of pigeon with a large crop.

There are several kinds of trouts, as there be tame and wild pigeons; and of tame there be croppers, carriers, runts. Walton's Angler.

CROSIER. n. f. [croiser, Fr. from croix, a cross.] The pastoral staff of a bishop, which has a cross upon it.

When prelates are great, there is also danger from them;

VOL. I.

as it was in the times of Anselmus and Thomas Becket, who, with their crofiers, did almost try it with the king's sword.

Bacon, Essay 20.

Grievances there were, I must confess, and some incongruities in my civil government; wherein some say the crofier, some say the distaff, was too busy. Howel's England's Tears.

Her front erect with majesty she bore,

The crofier wielded, and the mitre wore.

Dryden.

CRO'SLET. n. f. [croisset, French.]

1. A small cross.

Then Una 'gan to ask, if aught he knew,

Or heard abroad, of that her champion true,

That in his armour bare a croflet red. Fairy Queen, b. i.

C R O

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the crossrow plucks the letter G;
And says a wizard told him, that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakespeare's Richard III.
CRO'SSWIND. n. f. [cross and wind.] Wind blowing from the right or left.

The least unhappy persons do, in so fickle and so tempestuous a sea, as we all find this world, meet with many more either crosswinds or stormy gusts than prosperous gales.

Boy's Seraphick Love.

CRO'SSWAY. n. f. [cross and way.] A small obscure path intersecting the chief road.

Damn'd spirits all,

That in crossways and floods have burial,

Already to their wormy beds are gone.

Shakespeare.

CRO'SSWORT. n. f. [from cross and wort.]

It hath soft leaves, like the ladies bedstraw, from which it differs in the number of leaves, that are produced at every joint; which in this are only four, disposed in form of a cross. The rough or hairy crosswort is sometimes used in medicine, and is found wild on dry sandy banks.

Miller.

CROTCH. n. f. [croc, French.] A hook.

There is a tradition of a dilemma, that Moreton used to raise the benevolence to higher rates; and some called it his fork, and some his crotch.

Bacon's Henry VII.

CRO'TCHET. n. f. [crochet, French.]

1. [In music.] One of the notes or characters of time, equal to half a minim, and double a quaver.

Chambers.

As a good harper, stricken far in years,

Into whose cunning hands the gout doth fall,

All his old crotchets in his brain he bears,

But on his harp plays ill, or not at all.

Davies.

2. A support; a piece of wood fitted into another to support a building.

A stately temple shoots within the skies,

The crotchets of their cot in columns rise.

Dryden.

3. [In printing.] Hooks in which words are included [thus.]

4. A perverse conceit; an odd fancy.

All the devices and crotchets of new inventions, which crept into her, tended either to twich or enlarge the ivy.

Howel.

The horse smelt him out, and presently a crochet came in his head how he might countermin him. L'Estrange, Fab. 37.

TO CROUCH. v. n. [crochu, crooked, French.]

1. To stoop low; to lye close to the ground; as the lion crouches to his master.

2. To fawn; to bend servilely; to stoop meanly.

Every one that is left in thine house, shall come and crouch to him for a piece of silver and a morsel of bread. 1 Sa. ii. 36.

At his heels,

Leasht in like hounds, should famine, sword and fire,

Crouch for employment.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

They fawn and crouch to men of parts, whom they cannot ruin; quote them, when they are present; and, when they are absent, steal their jests.

Dryden's Aurengzebe, Pref.

Too well the vigour of that arm they know;

They lick the dust, and crouch beneath their fatal foe.

Your shameful story shall record of me,

The men all crouch'd, and left a woman free.

Dryd. In. Emp.

CROUP. n. f. [crouppe, French.]

1. The rump of a fowl.

2. The buttocks of a horse.

CROUPA'DES. n. f. [from croup.] Are higher leaps than those of corvets, that keep the fore and hind quarters of the horse in an equal height, so that he trusses his legs under his belly without jerking, or shooting his shoes.

Farrier's Dict.

CROW. n. f. [cnape, Saxon.]

1. A large black bird that feeds upon the carcases of beasts.

The crows and choughs, that wing the midway air,

Shew scarce so gross as beetles.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

To crows he like impartial grace affords,

And choughs and daws, and such republick birds.

Dryden.

2. To pluck a Crow, is to be industrious or contentious about that which is of no value.

If you dispute, we must even pluck a crow about it.

L'Estrange, Fable 7.

Resolve before we go,

That you and I must pull a crow.

Hudibras, p. ii. cant. ii.

3. A piece of iron used as a lever; as the Latins called a hook corvus.

The crow is used as a lever to lift up the ends of great heavy timber, when either a baulk or a rowler is to be laid under it, and then they thrust the claws between the ground and the timber; and laying a baulk, or some such stuff, behind the crow, they draw the other end of the shank backwards, and so raise the timber.

Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight

Unto my cell.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Against the gate employ your crows of iron.

Southern.

4. [From crow.] The voice of a cock, or the noise which he makes in his gaiety.

CRO'WFOOT. n. f. [from crow and foot; in Latin, ranunculus.]

The flower consists of several leaves, which expand in form of a rose, having a many-leaved empalement: out of the middle of the flower rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit, either round, cylindrical, or spiked; to the axis of which, as a placenta, adhere many naked seeds. The species are sixteen, of which eleven were brought originally from Turkey.

C R O

CRO'WFOOT. n. f. [from crow and foot.] A caltrop or piece of iron with four points, two, three, or four inches long; so that, whatever way it falls, one point is up. It is used in war for incommoding the cavalry.

Military Dict.

TO CROW. preterit. I crew, or crowed; I have crowed. v. n. [cnapan, Saxon.]

1. To make the noise which a cock makes in gaiety, or defiance.

But even then the morning cock crew loud. Shakesp. Ham.

Diogenes called an ill physician, cock. Why? faith he. Diogenes answered, Because when you crew, men use to rise.

Bacon, Apophth. 284.

That the lyon trembles at the crowing of the cock, king James, upon trial, found to be fabulous.

Hakewill.

Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer

For crowing loud, the noble Chanticleer,

So hight her cock.

Dryden's Fables.

2. To boast; to bully; to vapour; to bluster; to swagger.

CROWD. n. f. [crud, Saxon.]

1. A multitude confusedly pressed together.

2. A promiscuous medly, without order or distinction.

He could then compare the confusion of a multitude to that tumult he had observed in the Icarian sea, dashing and breaking among its crowd of islands.

Essay on Homer.

3. The vulgar; the populace.

He went not with the crowd to see a shrine,

But fed us, by the way, with food divine.

Dryden's Fables.

4. [from crwth, Welsh.] A fiddle.

His fiddle is your proper purchase,

Won in the service of the churches;

And by your doom must be allow'd

To be, or be no more, a crowd.

TO CROWD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fill with confused multitudes.

A mind which is ever crowding its memory with things which it learns, may cramp the invention itself.

Watts.

2. To press close together.

The time misorder'd, doth in common sense

Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form,

To hold our safety up.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

It seems probable, that the sea doth still grow narrower from age to age, and sinks more within its channel and the bowels of the earth, according as it can make its way into all those subterraneous cavities, and crowd the air out of them.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

As the mind itself is thought to take up no space, so its actions seem to require no time; but many of them seem to be crowded into an instant.

Locke.

Then let us fill

This little interval, this pause of life,

With all the virtues we can crowd into it.

Addison's Cato.

3. To incumber by multitudes.

How short is life! Why will vain courtiers toil,

And crowd a vainer monarch for a smile?

Granville.

4. TO CROWD SAIL. [A sea phrase.] To spread wide the sails upon the yards.

TO CROWD. v. n.

1. To swarm; to be numerous and confused.

They follow their undaunted king;

Crowd through their gates; and in the fields of light,

The shocking squadrons meet in mortal fight.

Dryd. Virgil.

2. To thrust among a multitude.

A mighty man, had not some cunning sin,

Amidst so many virtues, crowded in.

Cowley's Davideis.

CRO'WDER. n. f. [from crowd.] A fiddler.

Chevy-chafe sung by a blind crowder.

Sidney.

CRO'WKEEPER. n. f. [crow and keep.] A scarecrow. The following passage is controverted.

That fellow handles his bow like a crowkeeper.

Shakespeare.

CROWN. n. f. [couronne, Fr. kroone, Dut. corona, Latin.]

1. The ornament of the head which denotes imperial and regal dignity.

If thou be a king, where is thy crown?—

—My crown is in my heart, not on my head:

My crown is call'd content;

A crown it is that feldom kings enjoy.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Look down, you gods,

And on this couple drop a blessed crown.

Shakesp. Tempest.

I would the college of the cardinals

Would chuse him pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the triple crown upon his head.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Edward put to death a citizen,

Only for saying, he would make his son

Heir to the crown.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. A garland.

Receive a crown for thy well-ordering of the feast.

3. Reward

3. Reward; honorary distinction.

They do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible. 1 Cor. ix. 25.

Let merit crowns, and justice laurels give,
But let me happy by your pity live. Dryden's Epistles.

4. Regal power; royalty.

The succession of a crown in several countries, places it on different heads. Locke.

5. The top of the head.

If he awake,
From toe to crown he'll fill our skins with pinches;
Make us strange stuff. Shakespeare's Tempest.

While his head was working upon this thought, the toy took him in the crown to send for the songster. L'Estrange.

Behold! if fortune, or a mistress frowns,
Some plunge in business, others save their crowns. Pope.

6. The top of any thing; as, of a mountain.

Upon the crown o' th' cliff, what thing was that Which parted from you? Shakespeare's King Lear.

Huge trunks of trees, fell'd from the steepy crown
Of the bare mountains, roll with ruin down. Dryden's Æn.

7. Part of the hat that covers the head.

I once opened a remarkable atheroma: it was about as big as the crown of a man's hat, and lay underneath the pectoral muscle. Stark's Surgery.

8. A piece of money, anciently stamped with a crown; five shillings.

Trust not to your servants, who may mislead you, or misinform you, by which they may perhaps gain a few crowns.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

But he that can eat beef, and feed on bread which is so
brown,

May satisfy his appetite, and owe no man a crown. Suckling.

An ounce of silver, whether in pence, groats, or crown- pieces, silver or ducatoons, or in bullion, is, and eternally will be, of equal value to any other ounce of silver. Locke.

9. Honour; ornament; decoration; excellence; dignity.

Much experience is the crown of old men. Ecclus. xxv. 6.

Therefore my brethren, dearly beloved, and longed for, my joy and crown, stand fast in the Lord. Philip, iv. 1.

10. Completion; accomplishment.

CROWN-IMPERIAL. n. f. [corona imperialis, Lat.] A plant.

The flowers consist of six leaves, are bell-shaped, and hang downwards: these are ranged, as it were, into a crown, above which appears a great bush of leaves. The pointal of the flower becomes an oblong fruit, winged, and divided into three cells, filled with flat seeds. It hath a coated root, furnished with fibres at the bottom. Miller.

To CROWN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with the crown or regal ornament:

Had you not come upon your cue, my lord,
William lord Hastings had pronounc'd your part;
I mean your voice for crowning of the king. Shakesf. R. III.

Her who fairest does appear,
Crown her queen of all the year. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

TO CRU'NKLE. }

CRU'PPER. n. f. [from croupe, Fr. the buttocks of the horse.]
That part of the horseman's furniture that reaches from the saddle to the tail.
Clitophon had received such a blow, that he had lost the reins of his horse, with his head well nigh touching the crup- per of the horse. Sidney.
Where have you left the money that I gave you?
—Oh—sixpence, that I had a Wednesday last,
To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper. Shakespeare.
Full oft the rivals met, and neither spar'd
His utmost force, and each forgot to ward:
The head of this was to the saddle bent,
The other backward to the crupper sent. Dryden.

CRU'RAL. adj. [from crus cruris, Latin.] Belonging to the leg.
The sharpness of the teeth, and the strength of the crural muscles in lions and tygers, are the cause of the great and habitual immorality of those animals. Arbutnot.

CRUSA'DE. } n. f. See CROISADE.
CRUSA'DO. }

1. An expedition against the infidels.
2. A coin stamped with a cross.
Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of crusadoes. Shakespeare's Othello.

CRUSE. See CRUISE.

CRU'SET. n. f. A goldsmith's melting pot. Philips.

TO CRUSH. v. a. [ecrafer, French.]
1. To press between two opposite bodies; to squeeze.
You speak him far.—
—I don't extend him, sir: within himself
Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure fully. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The ass thrust herself unto the wall, and crushed Balaam's foot against the wall. Num. xxii. 25.
Bacchus that first, from out the purple grape,
Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine. Milt. Par. Lost.
I fought and fell like one, but death deceiv'd me:
I wanted weight of feeble Moors upon me,
To crush my foul out. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. To press with violence.
When loud winds from diff'rent quarters rush,
Vast clouds encount'ring, one another crush. Waller.

3. To overwhelm; to beat down.
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down, with a heavy fall,
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries! Shakesp. Rich. III.
The sad weight of such ingratitude
Will crush me into earth.
Vain is the force of man, and heav'n's as vain,
To crush the pillars which the pile sustain. Dryden's Æn.

4. To subdue; to depress; to dispirit.
They use them to plague their enemies, or to oppress and crush some of their own too stubborn freeholders. Spenser on Ireland.
Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't it had; for
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
This act
Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength, Defeating sin and death, his two main arms. Milt. Pa. Lost.
What can that man fear, who takes care to please a Being that is so able to crush all his adversaries? a Being that can divert

divert any misfortune from befalling him, or turn any such misfortune to his advantage? Addison's Guardian, No. 107.

TO CRUSH. v. n. To be condensed; to come in a close body.
Poverty, cold wind, and crushing rain,
Beat keen and heavy on thy tender years. Thomf. Autumn.

CRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A collision.
Thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addif. Cato.

CRUST. n. f. [crusta, Latin.]

1. Any shell, or external coat, by which any body is enveloped.
I have known the statue of an emperor quite hid under a crust of dross. Addison on Ancient Medals.
2. An incrustation; collection of matter into a hard body.
Were the river a confusion of never so many different bodies, if they had been all actually dissolved, they would at least have formed one continued crust; as we see the scorium of metals always gathers into a solid piece. Addison on Italy.
The viscous crust stops the entry of the chyle into the lacteals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
3. The case of a pye made of meal, and baked.
He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear of catching cold: when he should have been hunting down a buck, he was by his mother's side learning how to season it, or put it in crust. Addison's Spectator, No. 462.
4. The outer hard part of bread.
Th' impenetrable crust thy teeth defies,
And petrify'd with age, securely lies. Dryden's Juv. Sat. v.
5. A waste piece of bread.
Y' are liberal now; but when your turn is sped,
You'll wish me choak'd with every crust of bread. Dryden.
Men will do tricks, like dogs, for crusts. L'Estrange.

TO CRUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To envelop; to cover with a hard case.
Why gave you me a monarch's soul,
And crusted it with base plebeian clay. Dryd. Span. Fryar.
Nor is it improbable but that, in process of time, the whole surface of it may be crusted over, as the islands enlarge themselves, and the banks close in upon them. Addison on Italy.
And now their legs, and breasts, and bodies stood
Crusted with bark, and hard'ning into wood. Addison.
In some, who have run up to men without education, we may observe many great qualities darkened and eclipsed; their minds are crusted over, like diamonds in the rock. Felton.
2. To foul with concretions.
If your master hath many musty, or very foul and crusted bottles, let those be the first you truck at the next alehouse. Swift's Directions to the Butler.

TO CRUST. v. n. To gather or contract a crust; to gain a hard covering.
I contented myself with a plaister upon the place that was burnt, which crusted and healed in very few days. Temple.

CRUSTA'CEOUS. adj. [from crusta, Lat.] Shelly, with joints; not testaceous; not with one continued uninterrupted shell.
Lobster is crustaceous, oyster testaceous.
It is true that there are some shells, such as those of lobsters, crabs, and others of crustaceous kinds, that are very rarely found at land. Woodward's Natural History.

CRUSTA'CEOUSNESS. n. f. [from crustaceous.] The quality of having jointed shells.

CRU'STILY. adv. [from crusty.] Peevishly; snappishly.

CRU'STINESS. n. f. [from crusty.]

1. The quality of a crust.
2. Peevishness; moroseness.

CRU'STY. adj. [from crust.]

1. Covered with a crust.
The egg itself deserves our notice: its parts within, and its crusty coat without, are admirably well fitted for the business of incubation. Derham's Physico-Theology.
2. Sturdy; morose; snappish: a low word.

CRUTCH. n. f. [croccia, Ital. croce, Fr. crucke, Germ.] A support used by cripples.
Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
Beauty doth varnish age, as if new born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy. Shakespeare.
Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch:
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
On these new crutches let them learn to walk. Dryd. Geor.
This fair defect, this helpless aid call'd wife,
The bending crutch of a decrepit life. Dryden.
At best a crutch that lifts the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.
The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe. Pope's Messiah.

TO CRUTCH. v. a. [from crutch.] To support on crutches as a cripple.
I hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse. Dryden.

TO CRY. v. n. [crier, French.]

1. To speak with vehemence and loudness.

CRY

Methought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more!
Macbeth, doth murder sleep! the innocent sleep! Shakefp.
While his falling tears the stream supply'd,
Thus mourning to his mother goddess cry'd. Dryden's Virg.

2. To call importunately.
I cried, by reason of mine affliction, unto the Lord, and he heard me. Jon. ii. 2.
3. To talk eagerly or incessantly; to repeat continually.
They be idle; therefore they cry, saying let us go. Ex. v. 8.
4. To proclaim; to make publick.
Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem. Jer. ii. 2.
The Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose; therefore have I cried, concerning this, their strength is to sit still. If. xxx. 7.
5. To exclaim.
Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then, my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakefp.
What's the matter,
That in the several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
If dressing, mistreッシング, and compliment,
Take up thy day, the sun himself will cry
Against thee. Herbert.
Lyfimachus having obtained the favour of seeing his ships and machines, surpris'd at the contrivance, cried out that they were built with more than human art. Arbuthnot on Coins.
6. To utter lamentations.
We came crying hither:
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wawle and cry. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart; but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. If. lxxv. 14.
When any great evil has been upon philosophers, they certainly sigh and groan as pitifully, and cry out as loud, as other men. Tillotson, Sermon v.
7. To squall, as an infant.
Should some god tell me, that should I be born,
And cry again, his offer I should scorn. Denham.
Thus, in a starry night, fond children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.
He struggles for breath, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid. Dryden's Fables.
The child certainly knows that the wormseed or mustard-seed it refuses, is not the apple or sugar it cries for. Locke.
8. To weep; to shed tears.
Her who still weeps with spungy eyes,
And her who is dry cork, and never cries. Denne.
9. To utter an inarticulate voice, as an animal.
He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry. Psaln, cxlvii. 9.
The beasts of the field cry also unto thee. Joel, i. 20.
10. To yelp, as a hound on a scent.
Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord;
He cried upon it at the meekest loss;
Trust me, I take him for the better dog. Shakespeare.

TO CRY. v. a. To proclaim publickly something lost or found, in order to its recovery or restitution.
She seeks, she sighs, but no where spies him:
Love is lost, and thus she cries him. Crashaw.

TO CRY down. v. a.

1. To blame; to depreciate; to decry.
Bavius cries down an admirable treatise of philosophy, and says there's atheism in it. Watts's Improvement, p. i. c. 6.
Men of dissolute lives cry down religion, because they would not be under the restraints of it. Tillotson, Sermon ii.
2. To prohibit.
By all means cry down that unworthy course of late times, that they should pay money. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
3. To overbear.
I'll to the king,
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

TO CRY out. v. n.

1. To exclaim; to scream; to clamour.
They make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty. Job, xxxv. 5.
With that Susanna cried with a loud voice, and the two elders cried out against her. Suf. xxiv.
2. To complain loudly.
We are ready to cry out of an unequal management, and to blame the Divine administration. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. To blame; to censure: with of, against, upon.
Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities;
And that same word even now cries out on us. Shakespeare.
Giddy censure
Will then cry out of Marcius: oh, if he Had borne the business. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard. Job, xix. 7.

CRY

- Cry out upon the stars for doing*
 Ill offices, to cross their wooing. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. i.
Epiphanius cries out upon it as rank idolatry, and destructive to their souls who did it. Stillingsfleet.
 Tumult, sedition and rebellion, are things that the followers of that hypothesis cry out against. Locke.
 I find every sect, as far as reason will help them, make use of it gladly; and where it fails them, they cry out it is matter of faith, and above reason. Locke.
4. To declare loud.
  5. To be in labour.

What! is she crying out? —
 —So said her woman; and that her sufferance made Each pang a death. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 To CRY up. v. a.

1. To applaud; to exalt; to praise.
 Instead of crying up all things which are brought from beyond sea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The philosopher deservedly suspected himself of vanity, when cried up by the multitude. Glanville's Sceps. c. 18.

The astrologer, if his predictions come to pass, is cried up to the stars from whence he pretends to draw them. South.

They slight the strongest arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones against it. Tillotson's Serm.

He may, out of interest, as well as conviction, cry up that for sacred, which, if once trampled on and profaned, he himself cannot be safe, nor secure. Locke.

Poets, like monarchs on an Eastern throne,
 Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,
 Here can cry up, and there as boldly blame,
 And, as they please, give infamy or fame. Walsh.

Those who are fond of continuing the war, cry up our constant success at a most prodigious rate. Swift.

2. To raise the price by proclamation.
 All the effect that I conceive was made by crying up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that species, instead of others current here. Temple.

CRY. n. f. [cri, French.]

1. Lamentation; shriek; scream.
 And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, and there shall be a great cry throughout all the land. Exod. xi. 5.
2. Weeping; mourning.
3. Clamour; outcry.

Amazement seizes all; the general cry
 Proclaims Laocoon justly doom'd to die. Dryden's Virg. Æn.

These narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-stock. Add.

4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.
 In popish countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat. Swift.
5. Proclamation.

6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street;
 as, the cries of London.

7. Acclamation; popular favour.
 The cry went once for thee,
 And still it might, and yet it may again. Shakespeare.
8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.

Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beasts, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune. Locke.

9. Importunate call.
 Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them. Jer. vii. 13.
10. Yelping of dogs.

He scorns the dog, resolves to try
 The combat next; but if their cry
 Invades again his trembling ear,
 He strait resumes his wonted care. Waller.

11. Yell; inarticulate noise.
 There shall be the noise of a cry from the fishgate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills.
Zeph. i. 10.
12. A pack of dogs.

About her middle round,
 A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
 You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate
 As reek o' th' rotten fens; whose loves I prize
 As the dead carcases of unburied men,
 That do corrupt my air. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

CRYAL. n. f. The heron. Ainsworth.

CRYER. See CRIER.

CRYER. n. f. A kind of hawk called the falcon gentle; an enemy to pigeons, and very swift. Ainsworth.

CRYPTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτός.] Hidden; secret; occult; pri-

CRYPTICK. } vate; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes. Glanville's Apology.

Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.

CRY

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical] Occultly; secretly; perhaps in the following example, the author might have written critically.

We take the word acid in a familiar sense, without crypti- cally distinguishing it from those sapers that are a-kin to it. Boyle.

CRYPTO'GRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτός and γράφω.]

1. The act of writing secret characters.

2. Secret characters; ciphers.

CRYPTO'LOGY. n. f. [κρυπτός and λόγος.] Ænigmatical language.

CRYSTAL. n. f. [κρύσταλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexible or elastick, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrua, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Fossils.

Island crystal bears a red heat without losing its transparency, and in a very intense heat calcines without fusion:
 steeped a day or two in water, it loses its natural polish:
 rubbed on cloth, it attracts straws, like amber Chambers.

Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either blemished with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. It is always an oblique parallelopiped of six planes, and found from a quarter of an inch to three inches in diameter. It is moderately heavy, but very soft, and is easily serated with a pin. It very freely calcines into a pure, but opaque white. It is found in the island of Iceland, and in many parts of Germany and France. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one, of the same colour and thickness, and running parallel to one another at a small distance. Hill.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in stalactites. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit. Brown.

Crystal is certainly known, and distinguished by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same. Woodward's Math. Foss.

3. Crystal is also used for a factitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; though it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal. Chambers.

4. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or congealed in manner of crystal. Chambers.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bacon.

CRYSTAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of Gods,
 Thy crystal window ope, look out. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.
 In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds
 By crystal streams, that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystal- line. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them.
Bacon's Natural History, N. 7.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime
 On the crystalline sky, in saphir thron'd

Illustrious far and wide. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the forepart than the back-part of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray on the Creation.

CRYSTALLIZA'TION. n. f. [from crystallize.] Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified, according to the nature and texture of the salts. The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does.

does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is sated enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet, when they are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily divest them of their saltiness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodward's Natural History, p. i.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate; congeal; concrete; or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will likewise crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliquents.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outface the fiercest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear. Shakespeare.

This night, wherein the cube-drawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakespeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cubs, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange, Fable 72.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost,
One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cube, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cube! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakespeare.

O most comical fight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's shop last night; but, such two unlicked cubs! Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown George with lousy swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy mapple cup. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

CUBATION. n. f. [cubatio, Lat.] The act of lying down. Dict.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Dict.

CUBATURE. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from κῦβος, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common center, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew's Cosmolog. b. i. c. 2. f. 6.

CUBE Root. } n. f. The origin of a cubick number; or a CUBICK Root. } number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CUBEB. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish-brown colour on the surface, and composed of a corrugated or wrinkled external bark, covering a single and thin friable shell or capsule, containing a single seed of a roundish figure, blackish on the surface, and white within. It has an aromatick, but not very strong smell, and is acrid and pungent to the taste, but less so than pepper. Cubebs are brought into Europe from the island of Java; but the plant, which produces them, is wholly unknown to us. They are warm and carminative; and the Indians steep them in wine, and esteem them provocatives to venery. Hill.

Aromaticks, as cubebs, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer on the Humours.

CUBICAL. } adj. [from cube.]

CUBICK. }

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax-candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubiculary beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 6.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calm.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard and a quarter of the stature, and makes a cubit; the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbuthnot on Measures.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight,
Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that, unto men below, they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowel.

These mounted on a chair-curale,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cocu, Fr. from coukoo.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't. Shakespeare's Othello.

There have been,

Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in's absence. Shakesp.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed

Of lands, to her the cuckold may succeed. Dryden's Juvenal.
Ever since the reign of king Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

To CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou do'st thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryd. Juven. Sat. 6.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

C U D

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. Arbutn. Hist. of J. Bull.
CU'CKOO. n. f. [cuccu, Welsh; cocu, Fr. cockock, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the Spring; and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place; from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband at the approach of an adulterer by calling cuckoo, which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Finding Mopsa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of Spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plainfong cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay. Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shak.

I deduce,

From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of Spring; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Thomf. Spring.

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running?—

—A horseback, ye cuckoo;—but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

CU'CKOO-BUD.

CU'CKOO-FLOWER. } n. f. The name of a flower.

When daizies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

Nettles, cuckoo-flowers,

Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CU'CKOO-SPITTLE. n. f.

Cuckoo-spittle, or woodseare, is that spumous dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 8.

CU'CULLATE.

CU'CULLATED. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded, Latin.]

1. Hooded; covered, as with a hood or cowl.

2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.

They are differently cucullated, and capuched upon the head and back. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 3.

CU'CUMBER. n. f. [cucumis, Latin.] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell-shaped,
and expanded toward the top, and cut into many segments; of which some are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large style in the middle, charged with the farina:
others are female, or fruitful, being fastened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinated, which is divided into three or four cells, inclosing many oblong seeds. The species are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turkey cucumber. The first of these kinds is the most common in the English gardens. The second sort, which is by far the better fruit, as being less watery, and containing sweet seeds, is the most common kind cultivated in Holland.
The third sort is propagated for the uncommon length of its fruit, and also its having less water, and fewer seeds; but it is not so fruitful as the common kind, nor will it come so early.
The common sort is cultivated in three different seasons; the first of which is on hot-beds, under garden-frames, for early fruit: the second is under bell or hand glasses, for the middle crop; and the third is in the common ground for a late crop, or to pickle. Miller.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,

With crooked bodies and with bellies deep. Dryden's Virgil.

CU'CUMBER WILD. See WILD CUCUMBER.

CUCURBITACEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita, Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceus plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon. Chambers.

CU'CURBITE. n. f. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical vessel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbite. Quincy.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quicksilver in a cucurbite, fitted with a capacious glass-head. Boyle on Colours.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbite glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis. Mortimer's Husband.

CUD. n. f. [cud, Saxon.] That food which is repositied in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

VOL. I.

C U F

You range the pathless wood,

While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryden.

CU'DDEN. } n. f. [without etymology.] A clown; a stupid

CU'DDY. } rustick; a low dolt: a low bad word.

The flaving cudden, propp'd upon his staff,

Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryden.

To CU'DDLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lye close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,

Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?

She cuddles low behind the brake;

Nor would she stay, nor dares she fly. Prior.

CUDGEL. n. f. [kudse, Dutch.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon's N. Hist.

Do not provoke the rage of stones

And cudgels to thy hide and bones.

Tremble and vanish.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange, Fab. 15.

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack

His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel. Locke.

The wise Cornelius was convinced, that these, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing. Arbutnot and Pope's Martinus Scribnerus.

2. To cross the CUDGELS, is to yield, from the practice of cudgel- players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross the cudgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

To CU'DGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouth'd man, as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakesp. H. IV.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South's Sermons.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;

Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,

And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof. Hudibras, p. i.

CU'DWEED. n. f. [from cud and weed.] A plant.

It hath downy leaves: the cup of the flower is scaly, neither shining nor specious: the flowers are cut in form of a star. It is cultivated for medicinal use. Miller.

CUE. n. f. [queue, a tail, French.]

1. The tail or end of any thing; as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last words of a speech which the player who is to answer catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,

That he should weep for her? What would he do,

Had he the motive and the cue for passion

That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakesp.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,

Both you of my inclining, and the rest:

Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it

Without a prompter.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman:
nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CUE'RPO. n. f. [Spanish.] To be in cuerpo, is to be without the upper coat or cloke, so as to discover the true shape of the cuerpo or body.

Expos'd in cuerpo to their rage,

Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

CUFF. n. f. [zuffa, a battle, zuffare, to fight, Italian.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,

And as he stoop'd again to take it up,

The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest Shak.
There was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting needle. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment.
Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,

While the peers cuff, to make the rabble sport. Dryd. Juu.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him.——

——Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shakesp.

Well, sir Joseph, at your intreaty; but were not you, my friend, abused and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,

Sit only watchful with their heavy wings

To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise

To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Otway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,

With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,

Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,

And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food. Dryden.

3. To strike with wings. This seems improper.

Hov'ring about the coasts they make their moan,

And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own. Dryd. Æn.

CUFF. n. f. [coiffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

He railed at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning-gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

CU'INAGE. n. f. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into, for carriage to other places Cowel.

CU'IRASS. n. f. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccia, Ital.]
A breastplate.

The lance pursu'd the voice without delay,

And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,

And sign'd his bosom with a purple dint. Dryden.

CU'IRASSIER. n. f. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field all iron, cast a gleaming brown,

Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn

Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight. Mit. Parad. Reg.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CU'ISH. n. f. [cuisse, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,

His cuishes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,

Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury. Shak. Hen. IV.

The croslet some, and some the cuishes mould,

With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden's Æn.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuishes to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden's Virg. Æn. Dedicat.

CU'LBES. n. f. [colidei, Latin.] Monks in Scotland.

CU'LERAGE. n. f. The same plant with ARSE-SMART. Ainsw.

CU'LINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newton.

To those, who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbutnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker, b. v. sect. 34.

Our engines shall be bent

Against the brows of this resisting town:

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,

To cull the plots of best advantage. Shakesp. King John.

Like the bee, culling from ev'ry flow'r,

Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Sh.

In this covert will we make our stand,

Culling the principal of all the deer. Shakesp. Hen. VI. p. iii.

I do remember an apothecary

In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,

Culling of simples. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,

Out of one side, her happy minion. Shakesp. King John.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being culled, as it were, this grand charter was extracted. Howel's Parley of Beasts.

When false flow'rs of rhetoric thou would'st cull,

Trust nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

From his herd he culls,

For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls. Dryd. Virg. Gear.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the traders in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Locke.

With humble duty and officious haste,

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast. Prior.

The various off'rings of the world appear:

From each she nicely culls with curious toil,

And decks the goddesses with the glitt'ring spoil. Pope.

CU'LLER. n. f. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CU'LLION. n. f. [coglione, a fool, Ital. perhaps from scullion.
It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel;
a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,

And makes a god of such a cullion. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avaunt, you cullions. Shakesp.

CU'LLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you: you whorson, cullion'y, barber-monger, draw. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CU'LLUMBINE. n. f. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE, which see.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Milner.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry-bed;

Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbines. Spenser's Sonnets.

CU'LLY. n. f. [coglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as, by sharpers or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother wits

Are furnish'd with all perquisites,

B' allow'd to put all tricks upon

Our cully sex, and we use none? Hudibras, p. iii.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:

They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully. Arbutnot.

To CU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quincy.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves. Woodward on Fossils.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet. Arbutnot.

To CULMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Latin.] To be vertical;
to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:

For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,

But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon

Culminate from th' equator. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

CULMINATION. n. f. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABILITY. n. f. [from culpable.] Blameableness.

CU'LPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Latin]

1. Criminal.

Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Glo'ter,

Than from true evidence of good esteem,

He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

2. Guilty.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Ireland.

3. Blameable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them, without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable, to the end that to him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just. Hooker's Preface.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; for as much as it was in every man's power to have prevented
it. South's Sermons.

CU'LPABLENESS. n. f. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CU'LPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blameably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily. Taylor.

CU'LPIT. n. f. [about this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers; Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il parait, May it so appear, the with

th of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim;

Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;

And, after forms of law, was last requir'd

To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and condescending too far, he may injure his own cause; and by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior's Pref. to Solomon.

CULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plow perpendicular to the sheare. It is commonly written coulter.

Her fallow lees

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,

Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts,

That should deracinate such savagery. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

TO CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, French.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth, by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton on the Clafficks.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,

And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,

Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,

To cultivate the wild licentious savage

With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,

Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVATION. n. f. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South's Sermons.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVATOR. n. f. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle's Unsuccessful Experiments.

CULTURE. n. f. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it. 2 Esd viii. 6.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented 'till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If vain our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.

Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere. Pope's Essay on Man.

They rose as vigorous as the sun;

Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomson's Spring.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skilful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 75.

TO CULTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CULVER. n. f. [culpe, Saxon.] A pigeon. An old word.

Had he so done, he had him snatch'd away,

More light than culver in the falcon's fist. Fairy Queen.

Whence, borne on liquid wing,

The sound culver shoots. Thomson's Spring.

CULVERIN. n. f. [colauvrine, French.] A species of ordnance.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

Here a well-polish'd mall gives us the joy

To see our prince his matchless force employ:

No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,

But 'tis already more than half the mall;

And such a fury from his arm't has got,

As from a smoking culverin 'twere shot. Waller.

CULVERKEY. n. f. A species of flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, to make garlands. Walton's Angler.

TO CUMBER. v. a. [kommeren, komberen, to disturb, Dutch.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why asks he, what avails him not in fight,

And would but cumber, and retard his flight,

In which his only excellence is plac'd!

You give him death, that intercept his haste. Dryd. Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears,

Clog'd with his cloaths, and cumber'd with his years. Dryd.

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To croud or load with something useless.

I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? Lu. xiii. 7.

Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Shakesp. Timon.

The multiplying variety of arguments, especially frivolous ones, is not only lost labour, but cumbers the memory to no purpose. Locke.

3. To involve in difficulties and dangers; to distress.

Domestick fury, and fierce civil strife,

Shall cumber all the parts of Italy. Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.

4. To busy; to distract with multiplicity of cares.

Martha was cumbered about much serving. Luke, x. 40.

5. To be troublesome in any place.

Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge; where, if it chances to prick the owner, it will tear the thief. Grew's Cosmol. b. iii. c. 2. sect. 47.

CUMBER. n. f. [komber, Dutch.] Vexation; embarrassment; obstruction; hindrance; disturbance; distress.

By the occasion thereof I was brought to as great cumber and danger, as lightly any might escape. Sidney, b. ii.

Thus fade thy helps, and thus thy cumbers spring. Spenser.

The greatest ships are least serviceable, go very deep in water, are of marvellous charge and fearful cumber. Raleigh.

CUMBERSOME. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious.

Thinking it too early, as long as they had any day, to break off so pleasing a company, with going to perform a cumbersome obedience. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Burthensome; embarrassing.

I was drawn in to write the first part by accident, and to write the second by some defects in the first: these are the cumbersome perquisites of authors. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Unweildy; unmanageable.

Very long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be readily managed. Newton's Opt.

CUMBERSOMELY. adj. [from cumbersome.] In a troublesome manner; in a manner that produces hindrance and vexation.

CUMBERSOMENESS. n. f. [from cumbersome.] Encumbrance; hindrance; obstruction.

CUMBRANCE. n. f. [from cumber.] Burthen; hindrance; impediment.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,

The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt

To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,

Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise. Milt. P. L.

CUMBOUS. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious; disturbing.

A cloud of cumbrous gnats do him molest;

All striving to infix their feeble stings,

That from their noyance he no where can rest. Fairy Queen.

2. Oppressive; burthensome.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong

Life much! Bent rather, how I may be quit,

Fairest and easiest, of this cumbrous charge. Milt. Par. Lost.

Black was his count'nance in a little space;

For all the blood was gather'd in his face:

Help was at hand; they rear'd him from the ground,

And from his cumbrous arms his limbs unbound;

Then lanc'd a vein. Dryden.

Possession's load was grown so great,

He sunk beneath the cumb'rous weight. Swift.

3. Jumbled; obstructing each other.

Swift to their several quarters hasted then

The cumb'rous elements, earth, flood, air, fire. Milt. P. Lost.

CUMFREY. n. f. A medicinal plant.

CUMIN. n. f. [cuminum, Latin.] A plant.

The root is annual, the leaves like those of fenel: the seeds small, long, narrow, and crooked; two of which succeed each other's flower, as in other umbelliferous plants. The seeds of this plant are used in medicine, which are brought from the island of Malta, where it is cultivated; for it is too tender for our climate. Miller.

Rank-smelling rue, and cumin, good for eyes. Spenser.

TO CUMULATE. v. a. [cumulo, Latin.] To heap together.

A man that beholds the mighty shoals of shells, bedded and cumulated heap upon heap, amongst earth, will scarcely conceive which way these could ever live. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

CUMULATION. n. f. The act of heaping together. Dict.

CUNCTATION. n. f. [cunctatio, Latin.] Delay; procrastination; dilatoriness.

It is most certain, that the English made not their best improvements of these fortunate events; and that especially by two miserable errors, cunctation in prosecuting, and haste in departure. Hayward.

The swiftest animal, conjoined with a heavy body, implies that that common moral, festina lenté; and that celerity should always be contempered with cunctation. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

CUNCTATOR. n. f. [Latin.] One given to delay; a lingerer; an idler; a sluggard.

Others, being unwilling to discourage such cunctators, always keep them up in good hope, that, if they are not yet called, they may yet, with the thief, be brought in at the last hour.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

TO CUND. v. n. [from kennen, to know, Dutch.] To give notice: a provincial or obsolete word. See CONDER.

They are directed by a balker or huer on the cliff, who, discerning the course of the pilchard, cundeth, as they call it, the master of each boat.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CUNEAL. adj. [cuneus, Latin.] Relating to a wedge; having the form of a wedge.

CUNEA'TED. adj. [cuneus, Latin.] Made in form of a wedge.

CU'NEIFORM. adj. [from cuneus and forma, Latin.] Having the form of a wedge.

CUNEIFORM-BONES. n. f. The fourth, fifth, and sixth bones of the foot; thus called from their wedge-like shape, being large above and narrow below.

Diët.

CU'NNER. n. f. A kind of fish less than an oyster, that sticks close to the rocks.

Ainsworth.

CU'NNING. adj. [from connan, Sax. kennen, Dut. to know.]

1. Skilful; knowing; well instructed; learned.

Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,

Fit to instruct her youth.—To cunning men

I will be very kind; and liberal

To mine own children, in good bringing up. Shakespeare.

I do present you with a man of mine,

Cunning in musick and the mathematicks,

To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shakespeare.

Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? Wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? Wherein cunning, but in craft? Wherein crafty, but in villainy? Wherein villainous, but in all things? Wherein worthy, but in nothing.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and that can skill to cut and to grave. 2 Chron. ii. 7.

When Pedro does the lute command,

She guides the cunning artist's hand.

Prior.

2. Performed with skill; artful.

And over them Arachne high did lift

Her cunning web, and spread her subtle net,

Enwrapped in foul smoak, and clouds more black than jet.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 7. Stan. 28.

And there beside of marble stone was built

An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery;

On which true Christians blood was often spilt,

And holy martyrs often done to die. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Once put out thy light,

Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heat

That can thy light relumine. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Artfully deceitful; sly; designing; trickish; full of fetches and stratagems; subtle; crafty; subdulous.

Men will leave truth and misery to such as love it; they are resolved to be cunning: let others run the hazard of being sincere.

South's Sermons.

4. Acted with subtilty.

The more he protested, the more his father thought he dissembled, accounting his integrity to be but a cunning face of falshood.

Sidney, b. ii.

CU'NNING. n. f. [cunninge, Saxon.]

1. Artifice; deceit; slyness; sleight; craft; subtilty; dissimulation; fraudulent dexterity.

What if I be not so much the poet, as even that miserable subject of his cunning, whereof you speak.

Sidney.

We take cunning for a sinister or crooked wisdom; and certainly there is great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability.

Bacon, Essay 23.

These small wares and petty points of cunning are infinite, and it were a good deed to make a list of them; for nothing doth more hurt than that cunning men pass for wise. Bacon.

2. Art; skill; knowledge.

CU'NNINGLY. adv. [from cunning.] Artfully; slyly; subtilly; by fraudulent contrivance; craftily.

Amongst other crimes of this nature, there was diligent enquiry made of such as had raised and dispersed a bruit and rumour, a little before the field fought, that the rebels had the day, and that the king's army was overthrown, and the king fled; whereby it was supposed, that many succours were cunningly put off and kept back.

Bacon's Henry VII.

I must meet my danger, and destroy him first;

But cunningly and closely. Denham's Sophy.

When stock is high, they come between,

Making by second-hand their offers;

Then cunningly retire unseen,

With each a million in his coffers.

Swift.

CU'NNINGMAN. n. f. [cunning and man.] A man who pretends to tell fortunes, or teach how to recover stolen goods.

He sent him for a strong detachment

Of beadle, constable, and watchmen,

To attack the cunningman, for plunder

Committed falsely on his lumber. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

CU'NNINGNESS. n. f. [from cunning.] Deceitfulness; slyness.

CUP. n. f. [cup, Sax. kop, Dut. coupe, French.]

1. A small vessel to drink in.

Thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler. Genesis, xi. 13.

Ye heav'nly pow'rs, that guard

The British isles, such dire events remove

Far from fair Albion; nor let civil broils

Ferment from social cups.

Philips.

2. The liquor contained in the cup; the draught.

Which when the vile enchanteress perceiv'd,

How that my lord from her I would reprieve,

With cup thus charm'd, imparting the deceiv'd. Fairy Queen.

All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cups of their deservings.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Will't please your lordship, drink a cup of sack. Shakespeare.

They that never had the use

Of the grape's surprizing juice,

To the first delicious cup

All their reason render up.

Waller.

The best, the dearest fav'rite of the sky,

Must taste that cup; for man is born to die. Pope's Odysse.

3. Social entertainment; merry bout, [in the plural.]

Then shall our names,

Familiar in their mouth as household words,

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakespeare, H. V.

Let us suppose that I were reasoning, as one friend with another, by the fireside, or in our cups, without care, without any great affection to either party. Knolles's History of the Turks.

It was near a miracle to see an old man silent, since talking is the disease of age; but amongst cups, makes fully a wonder.

Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

Marrying, or prostituting, as befall

Rape or adultery, where passing fair

Allur'd them: thence from cups, to civil broils! Milton.

Amidst his cups with fainting shiv'ring seiz'd,

His limbs disjointed, and all o'er diseas'd,

His hand refuses to sustain the bowl. Dryden's Persius.

4. Any thing hollow like a cup; as, the husk of an acorn, the bell of a flower.

A pyrites of the same colour and shape, placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherick figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup.

Woodward on Fossils.

5. CUP and CAN. Familiar companions. The can is the large vessel, out of which the cup is filled, and to which it is a constant associate.

You boasting tell us where you din'd,

And how his lordship was so kind;

Swear he's a most facetious man;

That you and he are cup and can:

You travel with a heavy load,

And quite mistake preferment's road.

Swift.

TO CUP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with cups: this sense is obsolete.

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne,

In thy vats our cares be drown'd:

With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd!

Cup us, 'till the world go round. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. To fix a glass-bell or cucurbit upon the skin, to draw the blood in scarification.

The clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,

Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art:

Nor breathing veins, nor cupping will prevail;

All outward remedies and inward fail. Dryden's Fables.

You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of the air of Billingsgate, without knowing who I am; or whether I deserve to be cupped and scarified at this rate.

Spectator, No. 595.

Blistering, cupping, and bleeding are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate.

Addison's Spectator, No. 195.

Him the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd;

They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd; in short they cur'd. Pope.

CUPBE'ARER. n. f.

1. An officer of the king's household.

There is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to wait and to be sworn his servant, and shortly after his cupbearer at large; and the Summer following he was admitted in ordinary.

Wotton.

2. An attendant to give wine at a feast.

This vine was said to be given to Troi, the father of Priam, by Jupiter, as a recompence for his carrying away his son Ganymede to be his cupbearer.

Notes on the Odyssey.

CU'PEBOARD. n. f. [cup and board, a case or receptacle, Saxon.] A case with shelves, in which victuals or earthen ware is placed.

Some trees are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards, and desks, as walnut.

Bacon's Natural History.

Codrus

Codrus had but one bed; so short to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out:
His cupboard's head fix earthen pitchers grac'd,
Beneath them was his trusty tankard plac'd. Dryden's Juv.
Yet their wine and their victuals these curmudgeon-lubbards,
Lock up from my fight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.
To CUPBOARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To treasure in a cupboard; to hoard up.

The belly did remain
I th' midst o' th' body, idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
CUPIDITY. n. f. [cupiditas, Latin.] Concupiscence; unlawful or unreasonable longing.
CUPOLA. n. f. [Italian.] A dome; the hemispherical summit of a building.

Nature seems to have designed the head as the cupola to the most glorious of her works; and when we load it with super-numerary ornaments, we destroy the symmetry of the human figure. Addison's Spectator, No. 28.

CUPPEL. See COPPEL.

There be other bodies fixed, which have little or no spirit; so as there is nothing to fly out, as we see in the stuff whereof cuppels are made, which they put into furnaces, upon which fire worketh not. Bacon's Natural History, No. 799.

CUPPER. n. f. [from cup.] One who applies cupping-glasses; a scarifier.

CUPPING-GLASS. n. f. [from cup and glass.] A glass used by scarifiers to draw out the blood by rarefying the air.

A bubo, in this case, ought to be drawn outward by cupping-glasses, and brought to suppuration. Wise man's Surgery.

CUPREOUS. adj. [cupreus, Latin.] Coppery; consisting of copper.

Having, by the intervention of a little sal armoniack, made copper inflammable, I took some small grains, and put them under the wick of a burning candle, whereby they were with the melted tallow so kindled, that the green, not blue, flame of the cupreous body did burn for a good while. Boyle.

CUR. n. f. [korre, Dutch. See CURTAL.]

1. A worthless degenerate dog.

How does your fallow greyhound, fir?—

'Tis a good dog.——

—A cur, fir.——

—Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog. Shakespeare.

Here's an old drudging cur turned off to shift for himself, for want of the very teeth and heels that he had lost in his master's service. L'Estrange, Fable 25.

A cur may bear

The name of tiger, lion, or whate'er

Denotes the noblest or the fairest beast. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A term of reproach for a man.

What would you have, ye curs,

That like not peace nor war? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

This knight had occasion to inquire the way to St. Anne's-lane; upon which the person, whom he spoke to, called him a young popish cur, and asked him, who made Anne a saint. Addison's Spectator, No. 125.

CURABLE. adj. [from cure.] That admits a remedy; that may be healed.

A consumption of the lungs, at the beginning, herein differs from all other curable diseases, that it is not to be worn away by change of diet, or a cheerful spirit. Harvey on Consump.

A desperate wound must skilful hands employ,

But thine is curable by Philip's boy. Dryden's Juvenal's Sat.

CURABLENESS. n. f. [from curable.] Possibility to be healed.

CURACY. n. f. [from curate.] Employment of a curate, distinct from a benefice; employment which a hired clergyman holds under the beneficiary.

They get into orders as soon as they can, and, if they be very fortunate, arrive in time to a curacy here in town. Swift.

CURATE. n. f. [curator, Latin.] A clergyman hired to perform the duties of another.

He spar'd no pains; for curate he had none;

Nor durst he trust another with his care. Dryden's Fables.

2. A parish priest.

I thought the English of curate had been an ecclesiastical hireling.—No such matter; the proper import of the word signifies one who has the cure of souls. Collier on Pride.

CURATESHIP. n. f. [from curate.] The same with curacy.

CURATIVE. adj. [from cure.] Relating to the cure of diseases; not preservative.

The therapeutick or curative physick, we term that which restores the patient unto sanity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

There may be taken proper useful indications, both preservative and curative, from the qualities of the air. Arbutnot.

CURATOR. n. f. [Latin.] One that has the care and superintendence of any thing.

The curators of Bedlam assure us, that some lunaticks are persons of honour. Swift.

CURB. n. f. [courber, to bend, French.]

1. A curb is an iron chain, made fast to the upper part of the branches of the bridle, in a hole called the eye, and running over the beard of the horse. Farrier's Dict.

The ox hath his bow, the horse his curb, and the falcon his bells; so man hath his desire. Shakef. As you like it.

So four fierce coursers, starting to the race,
Scow'r through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threat'ning cries they fear. Dryd.

2. Restraint; inhibition; opposition; hindrance.

The Roman state, whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links asunder, than can ever

Appear in your impediment. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

We remain

In strictest bondage, though thus far remov'd,
Under th' inevitable curb, reserv'd

His captive multitude. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 322.

By these men, religion, that should be

The curb, is made the spur to tyranny. Denham's Sophy.

Even they who think us under no other tie to the true interest of our country, will allow this to be an effectual curb upon us. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. A curb is a hard and callous tumour, which runs along the inside of a horse's hoof; that is, on that part of the hoof that is opposite to the leg of the lame side. Farrier's Dict.

To CURB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To guide or restrain a horse with a curb.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed. Milt.

2. To restrain; to inhibit; to check; to confine; to hold back.

Were not the laws planted amongst them at the first, and had they not governours to curb and keep them still in awe and obedience?

Spenser on Ireland.

Then thou, the mother of so sweet a child,

Her false imagin'd loss cease to lament,

And wisely learn to curb thy sorrows wild. Milton.

If sense and learning are such unsociable imperious things, he ought to keep down the growth of his reason, and curb his intellectuals. Collier on Pride.

At this she curb'd a groan, that else had come;

And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb;

Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glew'd

Her lips, and raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryd. Fables.

'Till force returns, his ardour we restrain,

And curb his warlike wish to cross the main. Dryden.

Knowing when a muse should be indulg'd

In her full flight, and when she should be curbed. Roscommon.

Some poor cottage on the mountain's brow,

Where pinching want must curb thy warm desires,

And household cares suppress thy genial fires. Prior.

Nature to all things fix'd the limits fit,

And wisely curb'd proud man's pretending wit. Pope.

2. Sometimes with from; sometimes with of.

Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by

The consequence of the crown. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

CURD. n. f. [See CRUDLE.] The coagulation of milk; the concretion of the thicker parts of any liquor.

Milk of itself is such a compound of cream, curds, and whey, as it is easily turned and dissolved. Bacon's Nat. History.

This night, at least, with me forget your care;

Chesnuts and curds, and cream shall be your fare. Dryden.

Let Sporus tremble.—What! that thing of silk!

Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk? Pope.

To CURD. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn to curds; to cause to coagulate.

Maiden, does it curd thy blood,

To say I am thy mother? Shakef. All's well that ends well.

To CURDLE. v. n. [from curd.] To coagulate; to shoot together; to concreate.

Powder of mint, and powder of red roses, keep the milk somewhat from turning or curdling in the stomach. Bacon.

Some to the house,

The fold, and dairy, hungry bend their flight,

Sip round the pail, or taste the curdling cheese. Thom. Sum.

To CURDLE. v. a. To cause to coagulate; to force into concretions.

His changed powers at first themselves not felt,

'Till curdled cold his courage 'gan t' assail. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Mixed with the sixth part of a spoonful of milk, it burnt to the space of one hundred pulses, and the milk was curdled.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 366.

My soul is all the same,

Unmov'd with fear, and mov'd with martial fame;

But my chill blood is curdled in my veins,

And scarce the shadow of a man remains. Dryden's Virgil.

Ev'n now I fall a victim to thy wrongs;

Ev'n now a fatal draught works out my soul;

Ev'n now it curdles in my shrinking veins

The lazy blood, and freezes at my heart. Smith.

There is in the spirit of wine some acidity, by which brandy curdles milk. Floyer.

CURDY. adj. [from curd.] Coagulated; concreted; full of curds; curdled.

It differs from a vegetable emulsion, by coagulating into a curdy mass with acids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CURE. n. f. [cura, Latin.]

1. Remedy; restorative.

This league that we have made,
Will give her sadness very little cure.

Brother of England, how may we content

This widow lady? Shakespeare's King John.

Cold, hunger, prisons, ills without a cure,

All these he must, and guiltless oft, endure. Dryden's Fables.

Now we're ador'd, and the next hour displease;

At first your cure, and after your disease. Granville.

Horace advises the Romans to seek a seat in some remote part, by way of a cure for the corruption of their manners. Sw.

2. Act of healing.

I do cures to-day, and to-morrow. Lu. xiii. 32.

3. The benefice or employment of a curate or clergyman.

If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against entangling property, spinning out causes, squeezing clients, and making the laws a greater grievance than those who break them. Collier.

To CURE. v. a. [curo, Latin.]

1. To heal; to restore to health; to remedy; to recover: with of before the disease. Used of patients or diseases.

The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and therefore all contusions of bones, in hard weather, are more difficult to cure. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 688.

Here the poor Lover, that has long endur'd

Some proud nymph's scorn, of his fond passion's cur'd. Waller.

I never knew any man cured of inattention. Swift.

Hear what from love unpractis'd hearts endure,

From love, the sole disease thou canst not cure. Pope.

2. To prepare in any manner, so as to be preserved from corruption.

The beef would be so ill chosen, or so ill cured, as to stink many times before it came so far as Holland. Temple.

CUR'LESS. adj. [curè and less.] Without cure; without remedy.

Bootless are complaints, and cureless are my wounds;

No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight. Shak. H. VI.

Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall

To cureless ruin. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

If, said he,

Your grief alone is hard captivity,

For love of heav'n, with patience undergo

A cureless ill, since fate will have it so. Dryden's Fables.

CUR'ER. n. f. [from cure.] A healer; a physician.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shak.

The indexterity and worse success of the most famous of our consumption curers, do evidently demonstrate their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

CUR'FEW. n. f. [coursre feu, French.] An evening-peal, by which the conqueror willed, that every man should rake up his fire, and put out his light; so that in many places at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed time, it is said to ring curfew. Cowel.

You whose pastime

Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice

To hear the solemn curfew. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Oft on a plat of rising ground,

I hear the far off curfew sound,

Over some wide-water'd shoar,

Swinging slow with fullen roar. Milton.

2. A cover for a fire; a fireplate.

But now for pans, pots, curfews, counters and the like, the beauty will not be so much respected, so as the compound stuff is like to pass. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

CURIALITY. n. f. [from curialis, Latin.] The privileges, prerogatives, or perhaps retinue of a court.

The court and curiality.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

CURIOUSITY. n. f. [from curious.]

1. Inquisitiveness; inclination to enquiry.

2. Nicety; delicacy.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. Shakespeare's Timon.

3. Accuracy; exactness.

Qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Our eyes and senses, however armed or assisted, are too gross to discern the curiosity of the workmanship of nature. Ray on the Creation.

4. An act of curiosity; nice experiment.

There hath been practised also a curiosity, to set a tree upon the north-side of a wall, and, at a little height, to draw it through the wall, and spread it upon the south-side; conceiving that the root and lower part of the stock should enjoy the freshness of the shade, and the upper boughs and fruit, the comfort of the sun; but it sortet not. Bacon's Nat. History.

5. An object of curiosity; rarity.

We took a ramble together to see the curiosities of this great town. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 47.

CURIOUS. adj. [curiosus, Latin.]

1. Inquisitive; desirous of information; addicted to enquiry.

Be not curious in unnecessary matters; for more things are shewn unto thee than men understand. Ecclus. iii. 23.

Even then to them the spirit of lyes suggests,

That they were blind, because they saw not ill;

And breath'd into their uncorrupted breasts

A curious wish, which did corrupt their will. Davies.

2. Attentive to; diligent about: sometimes with after.

It is pity a gentleman so very curious after things that were elegant and beautiful, should not have been as curious as to their origin, their uses, and their natural history. Woodward.

3. Sometimes with of.

Then thus a senior of the place replies,

Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden's Fables.

4. Accurate; careful not to mistake.

Till Arrianism had made it a matter of great sharpness and subtlety of wit to be a sound believing Christian, men were not curious what syllables or particles of speech they used. Hook.

5. Difficult to please; solicitous of perfection; not negligent; full of care.

A temperate person is not curious of fancies and deliciousness; he thinks not much, and speaks not often of meat and drink. Taylor.

6. Exact; nice; subtle.

Both these senses embrace their objects at greater distance, with more variety, and with a more curious discrimination, than the other sense. Holder.

7. Artful; not neglectful; not fortuitous.

A vaile obscur'd the sunshine of her eyes,

The rose within herself her sweetness closed;

Each ornament about her seemly lies,

By curious chance, or careless art, compos'd. Fairfax, b. ii.

8. Elegant; neat; laboured; finished.

Understanding to devise curious works, to work in gold. Ex.

9. Rigid; severe; rigorous.

For curious I cannot be with you,

Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well. Shakespeare.

CURIOUSLY. adv. [from curious.]

1. Inquisitively; attentively; studiously.

At first I thought there had been no light reflected from the water in that place; but observing it more curiously, I saw within it several smaller round spots, which appeared much blacker and darker than the rest. Newton's Opt.

2. Elegantly; neatly.

Nor is it the having of wheels and springs, though never so curiously wrought, and artificially set, but the winding of them up, that must give motion to the watch. South's Sermons.

3. Artfully; exactly.

4. Captiously.

CURL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A ringlet of hair.

She appareled herself like a page, cutting off her hair, leaving nothing but the short curls to cover that noble head. Sid.

Just as in act he stood, in clouds enshrin'd,

Her hand she fasten'd on his hair behind;

Then backward by his yellow curls she drew

To him, and him alone confess'd in view. Dryden's Fables.

2. Undulation; wave; sinuosity; flexure.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plain and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from the sand holes, a little smoothed in polishing with putty. Newton's Opt. Prop. ii. Th. 2.

To CURL. v. a. [krollen, Dut. cympan, Sax. krille, Dan.]

1. To turn the hair in ringlets.

What hast thou been?—

—A serving man, proud in heart and mind, that curled my hair, wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

2. To writhe; to twist.

3. To dress with curls.

If she first meet the curled Antony,

He'll make demand of her kifs. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Up the trees

Climbing, fat thicker than the snaky locks

That curl'd Megæra. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 560.

4. To raise in waves, undulations, or sinuosity.

The visitation of the winds,

Who take the ruffian billows by the top,

Curling their monstrous heads. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Seas would be pools, without the brushing air

To curl the waves. Dryden's Fables.

To CURL. v. n.

1. To shrink into ringlets.

Those slender aerial bodies are separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. To rise in undulations.

To every nobler portion of the town,

The

CUR

- The curling billows roul their restless tide;
In parties now they straggle up and down,
As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide. Dryden.
While curling-smoaks from village tops are seen. Pope.
3. To twist itself.
Then round her slender waist he curl'd,
And stamp'd an image of himself, a sov'reign of the world.
Dryden's Fables.

CURLEW. n. f. [courlieu, French.]

1. A kind of water-fowl, with a large beak of a grey colour, with red and black spots.
2. A bird larger than a partridge, with longer legs. It runs very swiftly, and frequents the cornfields in Spain, in Sicily, and sometimes in France. Trevoux.

CURMUDGEON. n. f. [It is a vitious manner of pronouncing cœur méchant, Fr. an unknown correspondent.] An avaritious churlish fellow; a miser; a niggard; a churl; a griper.

And when he has it in his claws,
He'll not be hide-bound to the cause;
Nor shalt thou find him a curmudgeon,
If thou dispatch it without grudging. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 2.
Both their wine and their victuals these curmudgeon lubbards

Lock up from my fight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.
A man's way of living is commended, because he will give any rate for it; and a man will give any rate rather than pass for a poor wretch, or a penurious curmudgeon. Locke.

CURMUDGEONLY. adj. [from curmudgeon.] Avaricious; covetous; churlish; niggardly.

In a country where he that killed a hog invited the neighbourhood, a curmudgeonly fellow advised with his companions how he might save the charge. L'Estrange.

CURRANT. n. f.

1. The tree hath no prickles; the leaves are large: the flower consists of five leaves, placed in form of a rose: the ovary, which arises from the center of the flower-cup, becomes a globular fruit, produced in bunches.
2. A small dried grape, properly written corinth.

They butter'd currants on fat veal bestow'd,
And rumps of beef with virgin honey stew'd;
Insipid taste, old friend, to them who Paris know,
Where rocombole, shallot, and the rank garlick grow. King.

CURRENCY. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation; power of passing from hand to hand.
The currency of those half-pence would, in the universal opinion of our people, be utterly destructive to this kingdom. Swift.
2. General reception.
3. Fluency; readiness of utterance; easiness of pronunciation.
4. Continuance; constant flow; uninterrupted course.

The currency of time to establish a custom, ought to be with a continuando from the beginning to the end of the term prescribed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. General esteem; the rate at which any thing is vulgarly valued.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great over-match for this estate, assisted as it is, and, may be, is no good mintman, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after intrinsic value. Bacon's War with Spain.

6. The papers stamped in the English colonies by authority, and passing for money.

CURRENT. adj. [currrens, Latin.]

1. Circulatory; passing from hand to hand.
Shekels of silver, current money with the merchant. Gen.
That there was current money in Abraham's time is past doubt, though it is not sure that it was stamp'd; for he is said to be rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. Arbuthnot.
2. Generally received; uncontradicted; authoritative.

Many strange bruits are received for current. Sidney.
Because such as openly reprove supposed disorders of state, are taken for principal friends to the common benefit of all, under this fair and plausible colour, whatsoever they utter passeth for good and current. Hooker, b. i.
I have collected the facts, with all possible impartiality, from the current histories of those times. Swift.

3. Common; general.

They have been trained up from their infancy in one set of notions, without ever hearing or knowing what other opinions are current among mankind. Watts's Improvement.

About three months ago we had a current report of the king of France's death. Addison's Spectator.

4. Popular; such as is established by vulgar estimation.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsic; this, his current value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 7. sect. 34.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Oft leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves our ready wit;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh. Pope.

CUR

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.
Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make
No excuse current, but to hang thyself. Shakesp. Rich. III.
7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course; as, the current year.

CURRENT. n. f.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But his fair course is not hindered:
He makes sweet musick with th' enamel'd stones. Shakesp.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quickest, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whose fame in thine, like lesser currents lost;
Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods. Denham.
Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays,

While through the sky his shining current strays. Pope.

2. [In navigation.] Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship. Harris.

CURRENTLY. adj. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.
2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Hooker, Preface.

3. Popularly; fashionably; generally.
4. Without ceasing.

CURRENTNESS. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation.
2. General reception.
3. Easiness of pronunciation.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness? Camden's Remains.

CURRIER. n. f. [coriarius, Latin.] One who dresses and pares leather for those who make shoes, or other things.

A currier bought a bearskin of a huntsman, and laid him down ready money for it. L'Estrange.

Warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found
To lodge their loathsome carrion under ground;
For useless to the currier were their hides,
Nor could their tainted flesh with ocean tides
Be free'd from filth. Dryden's Virg. Geor. b. iii. l. 833.

CURRISH. adj. [from cur.] Having the qualities of a degenerate dog; brutal; sour; quarrelsome; malignant; churlish; uncivil; untractable; impracticable.

Sweet speaking oft a currish heart reclaims. Sidney, b. ii.

No care of justice, nor no rule of reason,
No temperance, nor no regard of season,
Did thenceforth ever enter in his mind,
But cruelty, the sign of currish kind. Hubbard's Tale.

In fashions wayward, and in love unkind;
For Cupid deigns not wound a currish mind. Fairfax, b. iv.

I would she were in heaven, so she could Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shakespeare.
She says your dog was a cur; and tells you, currish thanks is good enough for such a present. Shakesp. Two Gent. of Verona.

TO CURRY. v. a. [curium, leather, Latin.]

1. To dress leather, by beating and rubbing it.
2. To beat; to drub; to thresh; to chastise.

A deep design in't to divide
The well affected that confide;
By setting brother against brother,
To claw and curry one another. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

I may expect her to take care of her family, and curry her hide in case of refusal. Addison's Spectator, No. 211.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full; as we see both in men, and in the currying of horses: the cause is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts. Bacon.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.
If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakesp.

TO CURRY FAVOUR. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery.

He judg'd them still over-abjectly to fawn upon the heathens, and to curry favour with infidels. Hooker, b. iv. f. 7.

This humour succeeded so with the puppy, that an ass would go the same way to work to curry favour for himself. L'Estrange.

CURRYCOMB.

CURRY-COMB. n. f. [from curry and comb.] An iron instrument used for currying horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition; and so he would have of strigil and sistrum, if, instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he could see stamped in the margin small pictures of these instruments. Locke.

TO CURSE. v. a. [currian, Saxon.]

1. To wish evil to; to execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me. Num.
After Solyman had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly curst the same, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast unto the sea. Knolles's History of the Turks.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou curst me:

This imprecation was for Laius' death,

And thou hast wished me like him. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose

Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such sons as those. Pope.

TO CURSE. v. n. To imprecate; to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.

The silver about which thou curstedst, and speakest of also in my ears, behold the silver is with me. Jud. xvi. 2.

CURSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Malediction; wish of evil to another.

Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul. Job, xxxi. 30.

I never went from your lordship but with a longing to return, or without a hearty curse to him who invented ceremonies, and put me on the necessity of withdrawing. Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.

Curse on the stripling! how he apes his fire!

Ambitiously sententious! Addison's Cato.

CURSED. participial adj. [from curse.]

1. Under a curse; hateful; detestable; abominable; wicked.

Merciful pow'rs!

Refrain in me the curst thoughts that nature

Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Unholy; un sanctified; blasted by a curse.

Come lady, while heav'n lends us grace,

Let us fly this curst place,

Left the forcerer us entice

With some other new device;

Not a waste or needless sound,

'Till we come to holier ground. Milton.

3. Vexatious; troublesome.

This curst quarrel be no more renew'd;

Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still;

Though griev'd, yet subject to her husband's will. Dryden.

One day, I think, in Paradise he liv'd;

Destin'd the next his journey to pursue,

Where wounding thorns and curst thistles grew. Prior.

CURSEDLY. adv. [from curst.] Miserably; shamefully: a low cant word.

Satisfaction and restitution lies so curst hard on the gizzards of our publicans. L'Estrange.

Sure this is a nation that is curst afraid of being over-run with too much politeness, and cannot regain one great genius but at the expence of another. Pope.

CURSEDNESS. n. f. [from curst.] The state of being under a curse.

CURSHIP. n. f. [from cur.] Dogship; meanness; scoundrelship.

How durst he, I say, oppose thy curship,

'Gainst arms, authority, and worship. Hudibras, p. i.

CURSITOR. n. f. [Latin] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shires allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required. They are a corporation among themselves. Cowel.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the curst in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him is a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment. Bacon.

CURSORY. adj. [from curfus, Latin.] Curfory; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.

I have but with a curfory eye

O'er-glanc'd the articles. Shakespeare's Henry V.

CURSORYLY. adv. [from curfory.] Hastily; without care; without solicitous attention.

This power, and no other, Luther disowns, as any one that views the place but curfory must needs see. Atterbury.

CURSORYNESS. n. f. [from curfory.] Slight attention.

CURSORY. adj. [from curfory, Latin.] Hasty; quick; inattentive; careless.

The first, upon a curfory and superficial view, appeared like the head of another man. Addison.

CURST. adj. Froward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling

Mr. Mason, after his manner, was very merry with both parties, pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many lewd schoolmasters. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,

Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

I have no gift at all in shrewishness:

I am a right maid, for my cowardice;

Let her not strike me. Shakesf. Midsummer Night's Dream.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough,

Is, that she is intolerably curst,

And shrewd and forward, so beyond all measure,

That, were my state far worse than it is,

I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shakespeare.

Go, write in a martial hand; be curst and brief. It is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent, and full of invention. Sh.

When I dissuaded him from his intent,

And found him pight to do it with curst speech,

I threaten'd to discover him. Shakespeare's King Lear.

And though his mind

Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind. Craslow.

CURSTNESS. n. f. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble partners,

Touch you the sow'rest points with sweetest terms,

Nor curstness grow to the matter. Shakesf. Ant. and Cleopat.

Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;

Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,

And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryd.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

TO CURTAIL. v. a. [curto, Latin.] It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut, being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.]

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time

Into this breathing world. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Then why should we ourselves abridge,

And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 135.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fact his antagonist had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fact, but Faction. Addison.

CURTAIL Dog. n. f. A dog whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in courting. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail dog, and made me turn i' th' wheel. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errours.

CURTAIN. n. f. [cortina, Latin.]

1. A cloath contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air. Arbutnot on Diet.

So through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray,

And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great dulness! let's the curtain fall,

And universal darkness buries all. Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To close it so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I must draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in suspence, 'till materials are prepared. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last: the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good night. Pope.

3. To open it so as to discern the object.

Had I forgot thee? Oh, come in, Emilia:

Soft, by and by; let me the curtains draw.

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now? Shakesf.

So soon as the all-cheering sun

Should in the farthest East begin to draw

The shady curtain from Aurora's bed. Shakesf. Rom. and Jul.

Peace, the lovers are asleep:

They,

They, sweet turtles! folded lie
In the last knot that love could tie:
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
'Till this stormy night be gone;
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtain will be drawn,
And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night.

Craslow.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two bastions.

Military Dict.

The governour, not discouraged, suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. f. [from curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred!

The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed. Dryden's Juven.
She ought to exert the authority of the curtain-lecture, and, if she finds him of a rebellious disposition, to tame him. Addis.

TO CURTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The wand'ring prince and Dido,

When with a happy storm they were surpriz'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave. Shakespeare.

But in her temple's last recess inclos'd,

On dulness' lap th' anointed head repos'd:

Him close she curtain'd round with vapours blue,

And soft besprinkled with cimberian dew. Pope's Dunciad.

CURTATE DISTANCE. n. f. [In astronomy.] The distance of a planet's place from the sun, reduced to the ecliptick.

CURTA'TION. n. f. [from curto, to shorten, Latin.] The interval between a planet's distance from the sun and the curtate distance.

1. To leap; to bound.

Cry, holla! to thy tongue, I prythee: it curvets unseasonably. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Himself he on an earwig set,

Yet scarce he on his back could get,

So oft and high he did curvet,

'Ere he himself could settle. Drayton's Nymphid.

Seiz'd with unwonted pain, surpriz'd with fright,

The wounded steed curvets; and, rais'd upright,

Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind

Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind. Dryden's Æneis.

2. To frisk; to be licentious.

CURVET. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A leap; a bound.

2. A frolick; a prank.

CURVIL'NEAR. adj. [from curvus and linea, Lat.]

4. Practice of buying of certain persons.

You say he is assiduous in his calling, and is he not grown rich by it? Let him have your custom, but not your votes. Add.

5. Application from buyers; as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.] A law or right, not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued so one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town. Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man: prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom. Cowel.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported, or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfeitures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts. Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs, in England. Temple.

Customs to steal is such a trivial thing,

That 'tis their charter to defraud their king. Dryden.

Strabo tells you, that Britain bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallick trade. Arbutnot.

Cu'sTOMARILY. adv. [from customary.] Habitually; commonly.

To call God to witness truth, or a lye perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, in common discourse, customarily without any consideration of what we say, is one of the highest indignities and affronts that can be offered him.

Ray on the Creation.

Cu'sTOMARINESS. n. f. [from customary.] Frequency; commonness; frequent occurrence.

A vice, which, for its guilt, may justify the sharpest, and for its customariness the frequentest invectives, which can be made against it.

Government of the Tongue, sect. 3.

Cu'sTOMARY. adj. [from custom.]

1. Conformable to established custom; according to prescription.

Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul: I have here the customary gown. Shakesp.

Several ingenious persons, whose assistance might be conducive to the advance of real and useful knowledge, lay under the prejudices of education and customary belief. Glanv. Sceps.

2. Habitual.

We should carefully avoid the profane and irreverent use of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing, and take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship, or any thing belonging to it.

Tillotson, Sermon 5.

3. Usual; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him

With customary compliment, when he,

Wasting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling

A lip of much contempt, speeds from me. Shakespeare.

Cu'sTOMED. adj. [from custom.] Usual; common; that to which we are accustomed.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,

No common wind, no customed event,

But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,

And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shak. K. John.

Cu'sTOMER. n. f. [from custom.] One who frequents any place of sale for the sake of purchasing.

One would think it Overdone's house; for here be many old customers.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to hire

A flatt'ring audience, than poor tradesmen do

To persuade customers to buy their goods. Roscommon.

Don't you hear how lord Strut has bespoke his liveries at Lewis Baboon's shop? Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day.

Arbutnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement. Swift's Project for the Advancem. of Religion.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer, which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for.

Swift.

2. A common woman. This sense is now obsolete.

I marry her!—What, a customer? Pr'ythee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Shakesp. Othello.

CUTICLE. n. f. [cuticula, Latin.]

1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering-plaster. It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is also tied by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several lays of exceeding small scales, which cover one another more or less, according to the different thickness of the scarf-skin in the several parts of the body. Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle and nail. Bentley's Sermons.

2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file. Newton's Opt.

CUTICULAR. adj. [from cutis, Latin.] Belonging to the skin.

CUTH, signifies knowledge or skill. So Cuthwin is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sophianus. Gib. Camden.

CUTLASS. n. f. [coutelas, French.] This word is written sometimes cutlace, sometimes cuttleax: in Shakespeare, cuttleaxe; and in Pope, cutlass.] A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the seamen.

Were't not better

That I did suit me all points like a man?

A gallant cuttleax upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand. Shakespeare's As you like it.

To the lodgments of his herd he run,

Where the fat porkets slept beneath the sun;

Of two his cutlass launch'd the spouting blood,

These quarter'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood. Pope.

CUTLER. n. f. [coutelier, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A paultry ring

That she did give, whose poesy was

For all the world like cutler's poetry

Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakespeare.

In a bye cutler's shop on Tower-hill he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Wott.

He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler. Clar and n.

CUTPURSE. n. f. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings,

A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,

That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,

And put it in his pocket.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no bawd,

Cutpurse, nor burglary abroad? Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

If we could imagine a whole nation to be cutpurses and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves. Bentley's Sermons.

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.

3. The teeth that cut the meat.

The molares, or grinders are behind, nearest the center of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders. Ray on the Creation.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them; and then casts the same into the court to be written upon. Cowel.

CUT-THROAT. n. f. [cut and throat] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an assassin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Knolles's History of the Turks.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horrid instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South's Sermons.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,

And unpaid cut-throat soldiers are abroad;

Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill,

To save complaints and prosecution, kill. Dryden's Juvenal.

CUT-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CUTTING. n. f. [from cut.] A piece cut off; a chop.

The burning of the cuttings of vines, and casting them upon land, doth much good. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 667.

Many are propagated above ground by slips or cuttings. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray on the Creation.

CUTTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foul mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hanmer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

CYCLE. n. f. [cyclos, Latin; κύκλος.]

1. A circle.

2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method continued 'till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn's Kalendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive

To save appearances; how gird the sphere

With centrick and excentrick, scrib'd o'er

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

CYCLOID. n. f. [from κυκλῖδης, of κύκλος and εἶδος, shape.]

A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLOIDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance. Chambers.

CYCLOPÆDIA. n. f. [κυκλῖς and παιδεία.] A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CYGNET. n. f. [from cygnus, Latin.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,

Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death. Shak. K. John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,

Keeping them pris'ners underneath her wings. Shak. H. VI.

Cygnets, from grey, turn white. Bacon's Natural History.

Young cygnets are good meat, if fatt'd with oats; but fed with weeds, they taste fishy. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CYLINDER. n. f. [κύλινδρον.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular.

The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder for vaulted turrets, and round buildings. Peacham.

CYLINDRICAL. } adj. [from cylinder.] Partaking of the na-
CYLINDRICK. } ture of a cylinder; having the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stalaçitia, when several of the cylindrick stræ are contiguous, and grow together into one sheaf, is called brushiron ore. Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastick fibres are both smallest, and those are glands, which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrical canals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CYMAR. n. f. [properly written simar.] A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,

Her body shaded with a slight cymar;

Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryden.

CYMATIUM. n. f. [Lat. from κυμάτιον, a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions, or dentelli, make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 415.

CYMBAL. n. f. [cymbalum, Latin.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fifes,

Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,

Make the sun dance. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If mirth should fail, I'll busy her with cares,

Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars;

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,

As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryd. Aurengz.

CYNA'NTHROPY. n. f. [κυνανθρωπία, and ανθρωπία.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

CYNEGETICKS. n. f. [κυνηγῆτικα.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

CYNICAL. } adj. [κύνικος.] Having the qualities of a dog;

CYNICK. } curish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new fangled wit (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins.

CYNICK. n. f. [κύνικος.] A philosopher of the snarling or curish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vilely doth this cynick rhyme?—

Get you hence, firrah; saucy fellow, hence. Shakespeare.

CYNOSURE. n. f. [from κύων-σούρα.] The star near the North-pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it sees

Bosom'd high in tufted trees,

Where perhaps some beauty lies,

The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CYON. See CION.

Gather cyons for graffs before the buds sprout. Evelyn.

CYPRESS-TREE. [cypressus, Latin.]

Its leaves are squamose and flat: the male flowers, which are likewise squamose, grow at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The fruit is of a spherical form, and is composed of many woody tubercles, in which are contained hard angular seeds. Miller.

The cypress is a tall strait tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use: its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies. The wood of the cypress-tree is always green, very heavy, of a good smell, and never either rots or is worm eaten. It is distinguished into male and female: the branches of the male are, as it were, horizontal; and those of the female are upright, which is therefore generally used for palissades of gardens, and to make pyramids. The fruit is round, of an olive colour, and as large as nuts when they are ripe, and it grows in separate places. The Latins call it conus, because of its figure. This fruit is composed of a kind of scales, in the clefts of which are hidden little seeds, flat and angular. This tree is common on mount Libanus. Calmet.

In ivory coffers I have stufft my crowns;

In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shakespeare.

He taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. If. xlv. 14.

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,

And nodding cypresses form'd a fragrant shade. Pope's Odyss.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,

Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees. Shak. Hen. VI.

CY'FRUS. n. f. [I suppose from the place where it was made;
or corruptly from cypresses, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow,

Cyprus black as e'er was crow. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

To one of your receiving,

Enough is shewn: a cyprus, not a bosom,

Hides my poor heart!

Shakespeare.

CYST. } n. f. [κύστις.] A bag containing some morbid

CYSTIS. } matter.

In taking it out the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a meliceris. Wifeman's Surgery.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

CY'STICK. adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts; the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, which is a sort of repository for the gall;
or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CYSTO'TOMY. n. f. [κύστις and τέμνω.] The act or practice of opening incysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CZAR. n. f. [A Slavonian word, written more properly
tzar.] The title of the emperor of Russia.

CZARINA. n. f. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

D.

D Æ D

D, Is a consonant nearly approaching in sound to T, but formed by a stronger appulse of the tongue to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of D in English is uniform, and it is never mute.

DA CAPO. [Ital.] A term in musick, which signifying from the head or the beginning, means that the first part of the tune should be repeated at the conclusion.

To DAB. v. a. [dauber, Fr.] To strike gently with something soft or moist.

A fore should never be wiped by drawing a piece of tow or rag over it, but only by dabbing it with fine lint. Sharp.

A DAB. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A small lump of any thing.
2. A blow with something moist or soft.
3. Something moist or slimy thrown upon one.
4. [In low language.] An artist; a man expert at something. This is not used in writing.
5. A kind of small flat fish.

Of flat fish there are rays, flowks, dabs, plaice. Carew.
DAB-CHICK. n. f. A chicken newly hatched; a chicken with its feathers not yet grown.

A dab chick waddles through the copse,
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.
To DA'BBLE. v. a. [dabbelen, Dutch.] To smear; to daub; to spatter; to besprinkle; to wet

Then came by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood. Shakespeare's Richard III.
I scarified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine. Wiseman's Surgery.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings,
A fable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.
To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.
Neither will a spirit, that dwells with stars, dabble in this impurer mud. Glanville's Apology.
The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Estrange.

But when he found the boys at play,
And saw them dabbling in their clay,
He stood behind a stall to lurk,
And mark the progress of their work. Swift.
2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall bear it company, and be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them; though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, I have had no more reverence for the writer, and the printer, and left every thing standing just as I found it. Pope.

DA'BBLER. n. f. [from dabble.]

1. One that plays in water.
2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.
He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politicks should be ready to swear against him for disaffection. Swift's Intelligencer, N<sup>o</sup>. 19.

DACE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation: in most provinces called dare.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink
Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;
Where I may see my quill or cork down sink,

With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace. Walton's Angl.

DA'CTYLE. n. f. [δακτυλο, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger; as candidus.

DAD. n. f. [The child's way of expressing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and t, or the kindred letter d differently placed; as tad, Welsh; aita, Greek; aita, Gothick; tata, Latin. Mammas atque tatas habet fra, Mart.] Father.

I was never so bethumped with words,
Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shakesf. K. John.

His loving mother left him to my care;
Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

DA'DAL. auj. [dædalus, Latin.]

D A G

1. Various; variegated.
2. Skilful: this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated. Nor hath

The dædal hand of nature only pour'd
Her gifts of outward grace. Philips.

DA'FFODIL.

DAFFODI'LLY.

DAFFODOWNDI'LLY.

} n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from aphodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown; but the empalement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Strew me the green ground with daffodowndillies,
And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies. Spenser.

Bid Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate herse where Lycid lies. Milton.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:

The short narcissus, and fair daffodil,
Pancies to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden.

To DAFT. v. a. [contracted from do aft; that is, to throw back, to throw off.] To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly.

Where is his son,
The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daft the world aside,
And bid it pass? Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
I would she had bestow'd this dotage on me: I would have daft all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakesp.

DAG. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A dagger.
2. A handgun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly.

To DAG. v. a. [from daggle.] To daggle; to bemire; to let fall in the water: a low word.

DA'GGER. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A short sword; a poniard.
She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Sidney, b. ii.

This sword a dagger had his page,
That was but little for his age;
And therefore waited on him so,
As dwarfs upon knights errant do. Hudibras, p. i. cant. i.
He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he stabs him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs. Addison on Italy.

2. [In fencing schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.
3. [With printers.] The obelus; a mark of reference in form of a dagger; as [†].

DA'GGERSDRAWING. n. f. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers; approach to open violence.

They always are at daggersdrawing,
And one another clapperclawing. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.
I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggersdrawing, 'till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Swift.

To DA'GGLE. v. a. [from dag, dew; a word, according to Mr. Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from daz, sprinkled, or deagan, to dip. They are probably all of the same root.] To dip negligently in mire or water; to bemire; to besprinkle.

To DA'GGLE. v. n. To be in the mire; to run through wet or dirt.

Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down. Pope's Epistles.
DA'GGLEDIAIL. n. f. [daggle and tai.] Bemired; dipped in the water or mud; bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of so many dagg'dtail parsons, that happen to fall in their way. Swift.

DAILY. adj. [daglic, Saxon.] Happening every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince. Shak. H. VIII.

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief

From daily trouble, and continu'd grief.

Prior.

DA'ILY. adv. Every day; very often.

Let that man with better sense advise,

That of the world least part to us is read;

And daily how through hardy enterprize,

Many great regions are discovered. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

I was ambitious to be acquainted with a man, with whom

I conversed almost daily, for years together. Dryd. Virg. Ded.

DA'INTILY. adv. [from dainty.]

1. Elegantly; delicately.

This same truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries, and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle-light. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.

There is no region on earth so daintily watered, with such great navigable rivers. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Those young suiters had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and fare daintily. Broom's View of Epick Poems.

DA'INTINESS. n. f. [from dainty.]

1. Delicacy; softness.

What should yet thy palate please?

Daintiness and softer ease,

Sleeked limbs, and finest blood? Ben. Johnson's Forest.

2. Elegance; nicety.

The duke exceeded in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Wotton.

3. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.

Of sand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath discoursed without any daintiness. Wotton's Architecture.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.

They are all over watery; whereas an higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the slowest, yet the daintiest sense;

For ev'n the ears of such as have no skill,

Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;

And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Davies.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon's Holy War.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all

Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,

I'll swear hath corns. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Therefore to horse;

And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,

But shift away. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My house, within the city,

Is richly furnished with plate and gold,

Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands. Shakespeare.

Why should ye be so cruel to yourself,

And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent

For gentle usage, and soft delicacy?

Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine: in contempt.

Your dainty speakers have the curse,

To plead bad causes down to worse.

Prior.

DA'INTY. n. f.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Prov. xxiii. 3.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy store,

And unbought dainties of the poor.

Dryden.

The shepherd swains, with sure abundance blest,

In the fat flock, and rural dainties, feast. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.

Why, that's my dainty; I shall miss thee:

But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shakespeare's Tempest.

There is a fortune coming

Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,

And set thee aloft. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

DA'IRY. n. f. [from dey, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England from breeding, either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter, which will be extremely beaten down, when Ireland turns to it too. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

D A L

These beauties will suspect

That you have no more worth

Than the coarse and country fairy,

That doth haunt the hearth or dairy.

Ben. Johnson.

What stores my dairies and my folds contain!

A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dryden's Virgil.

She in pens his flocks will fold,

And then produce her dairy store.

Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.

Dairy, being well housewived, are exceeding commodious. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon's Natural History.

DA'IRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.] The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch,

To know their fortunes, equal to the rich:

The dairymaid enquires if she shall take

The trusty taylor, and the cook forsake. Dryden's Juvenal.

Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairymaids. Addison's Spectator.

DA'ISY. n. f. [bægereage, day's eye. Chaucer.] A Spring-flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtuse cones. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,

And lady smocks all over white,

And cuckow buds of yellow hue,

Do paint the meadows much bedight.

Shakespeare.

Then sing by turns, by turns the muses sing,

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring;

Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground:

Begin, the vales shall ev'ry note rebound. Pope's Spring.

This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison's Spectator, No. 131.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;

The daisy, primrose, violet, darkly blaze. Thomson's Spring.

DALE. n. f. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long tost with storms, and bet with bitter winds,

High over hills, and low adown the dale,

She wandred many a wood and measur'd many a vale.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 7. stanza. 28.

Before the downfall of the fairy state

This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,

This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd.

Tickell.

He steals along the lonely dale

In silent search.

DA'LLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance

Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw

To th' fire i' th' blood.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles

Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as befits

Fair couple, link'd in happy nuptial league,

Alone as they. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 332.

I'll head my people;

Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:

My warlike spirits work now another way,

And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,

Where he with his Duesia dalliance found,

In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r. Fairy Queen.

That, not mystick, where the sapient king

Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Milt. Par. Lost.

Since thou claim'st me for thy fire,

And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge

Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n, and joys

Then sweet, now sad to mention. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain;

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;

And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—

—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse

Your breach of promise.

Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.

DA'LLIER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifter; a fondler.

The dally dalliers with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers, purposed to be lost, before they were purposed to be made. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

DA'LLOP. n. f. [of unknown etymology.] A tuft, or clump.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,

Leave standing in dallops 'till time ye do bind.

Tusser.

To DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles.

Take up thy master:

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold
Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.
We have trilled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised; for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtezans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakespeare, Richard III.

3. To sport; to play; to frolick.

She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the fun. Shakespeare, Richard III.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wisd. xii. 26.

TO DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuse 'till a proper opportunity.

He fully set down, after his wonted manner, to perform service; not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dally- ing off the time with often skirmishes. Knolles's History.

DAM. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperour, shu'de never his dame have be siaine. Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Mother, says a sick kite, give over lamentations, and let me have your prayers: alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange, Fab. 17.

They bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

2. A human mother: in contempt or detestation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. f. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a skreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.
Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood
Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryden's Æneis.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store,
Bear down the dam, and open every door. Dryden.
The inside of the dam must be very smooth and streight;
and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO DAM. v. a. [demman, ropedemman, Saxon; dammen, Dut.]

1. To confine, or shut up water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place dammed up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakespeare, Henry VI. p. ii.
Home I would go,

But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and dammed up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Otway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread in the ground, so far as the earth is soft. Mortimer's Husbandry.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when dammed, forget their ancient current,
And wond'ring at their banks in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakespeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou dammed it up, the more it burns. Shakespeare.
Moon! if your influence be quite dammed up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long levell'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

DA'MAGE. n. f. [donage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon, Essay 28.

Such as were either sent from thence, or raised here, did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual sels and extortion. Davies on Ireland.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarend.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon's Henry VII.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice? Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 97.

5. [In law.] Any hurt or hindrance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to inquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowel.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person, into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts's Logick.

TO DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjoined and broken into pieces. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 223.

TO DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt; as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Governam. of the Tongue.

DA'MASCENE. n. f. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small black plum; a Damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry tree in blossom, the damascene and plum trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DAMASK. n. f. [damasquin, French; damaschino, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part rises above the rest in flowers, or other forms.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit;
Her damask late, now chang'd to purest white. Fairfax, b. ii.

TO DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK ROSE. n. f. The rose of Damascus; a red rose.
See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon's Nat. History.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor, shower'd from every bush, the damask-rose. Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. f. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. f. [dame, French; dama, Spanish.]

1. A lady; the title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts's Logick.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect:
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Shut your mouth, dame,

Or with this paper I shall stop it;
'Thou worse than any thing. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Mit. Par. Logick.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank.

D A M

His father Faunus : a Laurentian dame
His mother, fair Marica was her name. Dryden's Æneid.
Who would not repeat that bliss,
And frequent fight of such a dame
Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.
They killed the poor cock ; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.
4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough ; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. f.

The flower of this plant, called also queen's gillyflower, consists, for the most part, of four leaves, which expand in form of a cross : out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, which becomes a long, taper, cylindrical pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the im-bricated valves adhere on both sides, and are furnished with oblong, cylindrical, or globular seeds. Miller.

TO DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.
Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon, Essay 3.
2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.
That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power, that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South's Sermons.
3. To condemn.

His own impartial thought.

- Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryd. Juv.
4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance ; to explode.
They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend
To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.
For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
You are so good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works ; and next, that you are not so arrant a critick as to damn them, like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation ; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.
It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker, b. 5. sect. 42.
He's a creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death ;
And, to transport him in the mind he is,
Were damnable. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense ;
odious ; pernicious.
Oh thou damnable fellow ! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches ? Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

DA'MNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment ; so as to be excluded from mercy.
We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them ? South's Sermons.
2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense ; odiously ; hatefully.
The more sweets they bestowed upon them, the more
damnably their conserves stunk. Dennis.

DAMNATION. n. f. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy ; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Now mince the sin,

And mollify damnation with a phrase :

Say you consented not to Sancho's death,

But barely not forbade it.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

DA'MNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DA'MNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful ; detestable ; ab- horred ; abominable.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be

A couch for luxury and damned incest. Shakesp. Hamlet.

But, oh, what damned minutes tells he o'er,

Who doats, yet doubts ; suspects, yet strongly loves. Shak.

Dare not

To brand the spotless virtue of my prince

With falsehoods of most base and damn'd contrivance. Rowe.

DA'MNIFIC. adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss ; mis- chievous.

TO DA'MNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin.]

1. To endamage ; to injure ; to cause loss to any.
He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit satisfaction : the damnified person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.
2. To hurt ; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear,

As if late fight had nought him damnify'd,

He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear. Fairy Queen.

DA'MNINGNESS. n. f. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [dampe, Dutch.]

1. Moist ; inclining to wet ; not completely dry ; foggy.
She said no more : the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear. Dryden's Æn.
2. Dejected ; sunk ; depressed.
All these and more came flocking, but with looks Downcast and damp ; yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. 1.

A DAMP. n. f.

1. Fog ; moist air ; moisture.
Thus Adam to himself lamented loud,
Through the still night ; not now, as ere man fell,
Wholsom and cool, and mild ; but with black air
Accompany'd, with damps and dreadful gloom. Milt. P. L.
A rift there was, which from the mountain's height
Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light,
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden's Fables.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.
The heat of the sun in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps : these seldom happen but in the summer-time, when the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection ; depression of spirit ; cloud of the mind.
Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recov'ring, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd. Milt. P. L.
His name struck ev'ry where so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Roscommon.
Even now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts. Add. Cato.
An eternal state, he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever : a prospect which is enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours.
Rogers, Sermon 19.

This commendable resentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

TO DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet ; to moisten ; to make humid.
2. To depress ; to deject ; to chill.
The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. L'Estrange, Fable 38.
Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and,
like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterb.
It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken ; to abandon.
A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 158.

Unless an age too late, or cold

Climate, or years, damp my intended wing

Depress'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

DA'MPISHNESS. n. f. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness ; fogginess ; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick ; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Bacon's Natural History, N° 937.

DA'MPNES. n. f. [from damp.] Moisture ; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky

Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly ;

'Twas only water thrown on sails too dry. Dryden.

By stacks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DA'MPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected ; gloomy ; sorrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports. Hayward.

DA'MSEL. n. f. [damoiselle, French.]

1. A young gentlewoman ; a young woman of distinction : now only used in verse.
Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r. Prior.
2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damsels she was gone

In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun. Dryden's Fables.

3. A wench; a country lass.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child.

Gay's Preface to What d'ye call it.

DA'MSON. n. f. [corruptly from damscene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons,

And made me climb with danger of my life. Shak. H. VI.

DAN. n. f. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish, and domina, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men; as we now say master.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shakespeare.

Dick, if this story pleateth thee,

Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior's Alma.

To DANCE. v. n. [danfer, Fr. danyar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabick, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from danos.]

1. To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Sh. Mer. W. of Windj.

To DANCE Attendance. v. a. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh's Essays.

It upbraids you

To let your father's friend, for three long months,

Thus dance attendance for a word of audience. Dryd. Cleom.

To DANCE. v. a.

1. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandfire lov'd thee well;

Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shak. Tit. Andron.

That I see thee here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,

Than when I first my wedded mistress saw

Bestride my threshold. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

In pestilences the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 333.

DANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by musick.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak of Herne the hunter. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. Bacon, Essay 33.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,

With am'rous songs and wanton dances grac'd. Dryd. Juv.

DA'NCER. n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept

His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook

The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakesf. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce

With these your pleasing labours; for great use

As much weariness as perfection brings. Donne.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

It is a usual practice in these times for our funambulours, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,

And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,

Forming her movements to the rules of art;

And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand

Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command. Prior.

DA'NCINGMASTER. n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their ape's tricks by a dancingmaster. L'Estrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding, sect. 4.

DA'NCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [dancing and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing schools,

And teach lavolta's high, and swift couranto's;

Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakesf. Henry V.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing school for the institution of apes of quality. L'Estrange.

DANDELION. n. f. [dent de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;

For Blouzelinda, blithsome maid, is dead! Gay's Pastorals.

DA'NDIPRAT. n. f. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; an urchin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DA'NDLE. v. a. [dandelen, Dutch.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. If. lxvi. 12.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprites,

Oft skip into our chamber those sweet nights,

And, kiss'd and dandl'd on thy father's knee,

Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see. Donne.

Courts are but superficial schools to dandle fools. Wotton.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

Dandled the kid. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 344.

Motion occasions sleep, as we find by the common use of rocking froward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurses arms. Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child shall be advanc'd,

And be received for the emp'ror's heir;

And let the emperor dandle him for his own. Sh. Tit. Andr.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; and I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty master. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 113.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service to them committed, as if they would not have the enemy subdued. Spenser on Ireland.

DA'NDLER. n. f. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DA'NDRUFF. n. f. [often written dendruff, from tan, the itch, and drog, sordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DA'NEWORT. n. f. A species of elder; called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DANGER. n. f. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from damnum, Menage from angaria, Minshew from daos, death, to which Junius seems inclined.] Risk; hazard; peril.

They that sail on the sea, tell of the danger. Ecclus. xliii. 24.

Our craft is in danger to be set at nought. AEs. x. 27.

I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakespeare's King Lear.

More danger now from man alone we find,

Than from the rocks, the billows, and the wind. Waller.

To DA'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up

For the main soldier; whose quality going on,

The sides o' th' world may danger. Shakesf. Ant. and Cleopat.

DA'NGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risk; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting the multiplying of kingdoms. Sid.

DA'NGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perillous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city. Ecclus. ix.

All men counsel me to take away thy life, likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects. Sidney, b. ii.

He her the maiden sleeping found,
On the dank and dirty ground. Shakef. Midf. Night's Dream.

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and, rising on stiff pinions, tour
The mid aerial sky. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 440.

Through each thicket, dank or dry,
Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on
His midnight search. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 179.

Lawrence, of virtuous father, virtuous son,
Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,
Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a fullen day? Milton's Paradise Regained.

By the rusby-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays. Milton.

Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and dropping weeds
To the stern god of sea. Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather. Grew.

DA'NKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home,
There left me. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

TO DAP. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water: a word, I believe, only used by anglers.

I say 'tis copper. Dar'st thou be as good as thy word now?
—Why, Hal, thou know'st, as thou art but a man, I dare;
but as thou art a prince, I fear thee. Shakef. Henry IV. p. i.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing advent'rously. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare any dangerous fact. Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul. Dryden.

Deliberate and well-weighed courage knows both to be cautious and to dare, as occasion offers. Dryden.

D A R

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, 'till it be very fully examined. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

TO DARE. v. a. To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life
Did hear challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
'To gentle exercise and proof of arms. Shakef. Henry IV.

Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch;
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love. Shakespeare.

He had many days, in this proud manner, come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, and, as it were, daring them to fight. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare providence to the face. South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Celia's eyes. Roscommon.

Immortal power, and brave the thunderer. Granville.

TO DARE LARKS. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, which keeps them in amaze 'till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks. Carew.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryden.

DARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Defiance; challenge.

Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakef. Anthony and Cleopatra.

DA'REFUL. adj. [dare and full] Full of defiance.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DA'RING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous; fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has indeed many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human thoughts and passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant. Addison's Essays on the Georgicks.

The song too daring, and the theme too great. Prior.

Grieve not, O daring prince! that noble heart. Pope.

DA'RINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly; courageously; fearlessly; impudently; outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press. Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press. Halifax.

DA'RINGNESS. n. f. [from daring.] Boldness.

DARK. adj. [beorn, Saxon.]

1. Not light; without light.

Fleance, his son, who keeps him company,
Must embrace the fate of that dark hour. Shakef. Macbeth.

While we converse with her, we mark
No want of day, nor think it dark. Waller.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.

If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean. 1 Lev. xiii. 6.

In Muscovy itself the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen. Boyle.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.

Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,
Conduct my weary steps. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

4. Opaque; not transparent.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain. Hosker, b. i. sect. 1.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose. Shakef.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

The age, wherein he liv'd, was dark; but he Could not want sight, who taught the world to see. Denb.

7. Gloomy; not chearful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison on Italy.

DARK. n. f.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold, hold! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the chearful ways of men
Cut off. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 45.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immured, and by curve lines. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark, and thinks it proper to continue so. Atterbury.

3. Want

3. Want of knowledge.

'Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before. Locke.

TO DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure; obsolete.

Fair when her breast, like a rich laden bark
With precious merchandize, she forth doth lay:

Fair when that cloud of pride, which oft doth dark
Her goodly light, with smiles she drives away. Spenser.

TO DA'RKEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

Black with surrounding forests then it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood. Addison.
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write. Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand. Bacon's Hen. VII.

3. To foul; to fully.

The lusts and passions of men do fully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence. Tillotson, Serm. 4.

TO DA'RKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DA'RKLING. [a participle, as it seems, from darkle, which yet I have never found.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so. Shakespeare.

Darkling stands

The varying shore o' th' world. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

The wakeful bird

Sings darkling, and, in shadiest covert hid,

Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's pow'r,

With words and wicked herbs, from human kind

Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd. Dryden's Æn.

DA'RKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light;
obscurely; blindly.

For well you know, and can record alone,

What fame to future times conveys but darkly down. Dryd.

DA'RKNESS. n. f. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep. Gen. i. 2.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job, x. 20.

2. Opakeness.

3. Obscurity.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;

Win us with honest trifles, to betray us

In deepest consequence. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received: to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness. Locke.

5. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear son. Coloss. i. 13.

DA'RK SOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him through a darksome narrow pass,

To a broad gate, all built of beaten gold. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimmed were

With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.

You must not look to have an image, or the like, in any thing that is lightsome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome which shew the figure. Bacon's N. Hist.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,

Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green. Milton.

He here with us to be,

Forsook the courts of everlasting day,

And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay. Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,

'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital. Dryden's Juvenal.

The darksome pines that o'er yon' rocks reclin'd,

Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.

DA'RLING. adj. [deopling, Sax.] Favourite; dear; beloved;
regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Estrange.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind. Watts's Improvement.

DA'RLING. n. f. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,

And his and my lov'd darling. Shakespeare's Tempest.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,

The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide. Halifax.

She immediately became the darling of the princess Sophia.

Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 21.

TO DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.] To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn?

Gay.

He spent every day ten hours in his dash, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

DA'RNEL. n. f. A weed growing in the fields. See GRASS.

He was met ev'n now

Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,

With hardocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo flowers,

Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow

In our sustaining corn: Shakespeare's King Lear.

Want ye corn for bread?

'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste? Shak. H. VI.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;

But oats and darnel choak the rising corn. Dryd. Pastorals.

TO DA'RRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare:
it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille.]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle:

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over-hand. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:

Darrain your battle; for they are at hand. Shak. Hen. VI.

2. To apply to the fight.

Therewith they 'gan to hurlen greedily,

Redoubted battle ready to darraine. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

DART. n. f. [dard, French.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Peacham.

O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,

The weapons round his hollow temples ring. Dryden's Æn.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

TO DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He whets his tusks, and turns, and dares the war;

Th' invaders dart their jav'lins from afar. Dryden's Æn.

Pan came, and ask'd what magick caus'd my smart;

Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart. Pope.

2. To throw; to emit; as the sun darts his beams on the earth.

TO DART. v. n. To fly as a dart; to let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

TO DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

1. To throw any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 792.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as he. Tillotson, Serm. 1.

2. To break by collision.

They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakesp.

David's throne shall be like a tree,

Spreading and overshadow'ing all the earth;

Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash

All monarchies besides throughout the world. Milt. P. Reg.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortim.

4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded

The sudden breach on't. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.

At once the brushing oars and brazen prow

Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depths below. Dryd.

6. To mingle; to change by some small admixture.

Hight Whacum, bred to dash and draw,

Not wine, but more unwholesome law. Hudibras, p. ii. c. 3.

I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.

Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Speclator, N<sup>o</sup>. 580.

7. To form or print in haste, carelessly.

Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,

A fool, so just a copy of a wit. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii. l. 43.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a line, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you. Pope.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear.

His tongue

Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash

Maturest counsels. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 114.

Yearly enjoind, some say, to undergo

This annual, humbling certain number'd days,

To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milt. Pa. Lost.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy,

Dash'd me with blushes. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

To dash this cavil, read but the practice of Christian em-perors. South.

Nothing

D A T

Nothing dash'd the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, in the very interim while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange, Fab. 18.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,
Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love. Add. Cu. Met.
After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South's Sermons.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star. Pope.

TO DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface.

If the vessel be suddenly stop't in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Cheyne.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade, while dashing, fall. Thomson.

3. To rush through water so as to make it fly.

Doeg, though without knowing how or why,
Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
Through sense and nonsense, never out or in. Dryden.

A DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Collision.

By the touch ethereal rous'd,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war,
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below
They furious spring. Thomson's Summer, l. 1100.

2. Infusion; something mingled in a small proportion.

There is nothing which one regards so much, with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison's Spectator, No. 247.

3. A mark in writing; a line —, to note a pause, or omission.

He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing. Erown's Vulgar Err.
In modern wit all printed trash is Set off with num'rous breaks and dashes. Swift.

4. Stroke; blow.

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.
— She takes upon her bravely at first dash. Shakesp. H. V.

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

Hark, hark, the waters fall;
And, with a murmuring sound,
Dash, dash, upon the ground,
To gentle slumbers call. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

DA'STARD. n. f. adartmga, Saxon.] A coward; a poltron; A man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our daftard nobles,
And suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?
How long will Dares wait his daftard foes. Dryden's Æn.

Daftard and drunkard, mean and insolent;
Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost, but the last in fight. Dryden.
Such bug-bear thoughts, once got into the minds of children, make them daftards, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after. Locke on Education, sect. 138.

Curse on their daftard souls, they stand astonish'd. Addif.

TO DA'STARD. v. a. To terrify; to intimidate; to desert with cowardice; to dispirit.

I'm weary of this flesh which holds us here,
And daftards manly soul with hope and fear. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

TO DA'STARDISE. v. a. [from daftard.] To intimidate; to deject with cowardice; to dispirit; to depress; to terrify; to make an habitual coward.

He had such things to urge against our marriage,
As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle,
And daftardise my courage. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

DA'STARDLY. adj. [from daftard.] Cowardly; mean; timorous.

This way of brawl and clamour is so arrant a mark of a daftardly wretch, that he does as good as call himself so that uses it. L'Estrange.

DA'STARDY. n. f. [from daftard.] Cowardliness; timorousness.

DA'TARY. n. f. [from date.] An officer of the Chancery of Rome, through whose hands most benefices pass. Dict.

DATE. n. f. [datte, Fr. from datum, Latin.]

1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning.

2. The time at which any event happened.

3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.

My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds, without a date, they say are void. Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

VOL. I.

D A U

What time would spare, from steel receives its date;
And monuments, like men, submit to fate. Pope.

5. Duration; continuance.

Our date to immortality extend? Denham.

Then raise,
From the conflagrant mass, purg'd, and refin'd,
New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date,
Founded in righteousness. Milton's Paradise Lost.

6. [from datylus.] The fruit of the date-tree.

Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.
— They call for *date*s and quinces in the pastry. Shakesp.

DATE-TREE. n. f. See PALM, of which it is a species.

TO DATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To note with the time at which any thing is written or done.

'Tis all one, in respect of eternal duration yet behind, whether we begin the world so many millions of ages ago, or date from the late æra of about six thousand years. Lentley's Sermons.

To all their dated backs he turns you round;
These Aldus printed, those Du Süeil has bound. Pope's Epist.

DA'TELESS. adj. [from date.] Without any fixed term.

The fly-flow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare's Rich. II.

DA'TIVE. adj. [dativus, Latin]

1. [In grammar.] The epithet of the case that signifies the person to whom any thing is given.

2. [In law.] Those are term'd dativ executors who are appointed such by the judge's decree; as administrators with us here in England. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO DAUB. v. a. [dabben, Dutch; dauber, French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.

She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exod. ii. 3.

2. To paint coarsely.

Hasty dau'ing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off. Ottw Orph. Dedic.
They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection, and too much haste. Dryden's D-fresnoy.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts's Logick.

3. To cover with something specious or strong, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakespeare's R. III.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegancy than dau'd with cost. Pacon's Essays.

Let him be dau'd with lace, live high, and whore;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden's Juvenal.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

TO DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite.

I cannot daub it further;
And yet I must. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A DA'UBER. n. f. [from daub.] A coarse low painter.

What they call'd his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-ey'd hero on his elephant. Dryden's Juven. Sat.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas,
Hangs a new angel two doors from us,
As fine as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

DA'UBRY. n. f. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells, and such dau'ry as this is beyond our element. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Viscous; glutinous; adhesive.

Not in vain th' industrious kind,
With dauby wax and flow'rs the chinks have lin'd. Dryden.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby marling bind,
Or fear-cloth masts with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

DA'UGHTER. n. f. [dauhtar, Gothick; dohter, Saxon; dotter, Runick; dohter, German; dochter, Dutch.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope's Hom. Odyssey.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.

Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Gen. xxxiv.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendent.

5. The penitent of a confessor.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

— My leisure serves me, penfive daughter, now. Shakesp.

TO DAUNT. v. a. [domter, French, domitare, Latin.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms through Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.
Where the rude ax, with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milton.
Some preferences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville's Scept. c. 24.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakespeare's King John.
Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd:
With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd.
Dryden's Virgil's Æneid.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryden.
The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. f. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. f. [supposed by Skinner so named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawl; the German tul, and dol, in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] The name of a bird.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daws to peck it. Shakespeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
That daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,
When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. f. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow or incision in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Moxon.

TO DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.
Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so dawk it. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

TO DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance towards day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.
I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shak. Tit. Andr.
As it began to dawn, towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Mat. xxviii. 1.
All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To glimmer obscurely.
A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, viz. that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryden's Æn.
Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ,
To search the land, and where the cities lie,
And what the men; but give this day to joy. Dryden's Æn.

2. Beginning; first rise.
These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

But such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence, and undissembling truth. Thomson's Summer.

DAY. n. f. [dæg, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Mat. xx. 6.
Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackmore's Creation.
Or object new

Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 224.

2. The time from noon to noon, called the natural day.
How many hours bring about the day?

How many days will finish up the year? Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. Light; sunshine.
Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Rom. xiii. 13.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day:

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day:
'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.
Yet are we able only to survey

Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age;
the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gutheline his heir,
The justest man, and truest, in his days. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I think, in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his word; that is, in his whole life.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey. Roscommon.
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes your's,
And little is to do. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day? Dryden.

7. An appointed or fixed time.
Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryden's Juvenal.

8. A day appointed for some commemoration.
The field of Agincourt,
Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

9. From day to day; without certainty or continuance.
Bavaria hath been taught, that merit and service doth oblige the Spaniard but from day to day. Bacon's War with Spain.

TO-DAY. On this day.
To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. Pf.
The past is all by death possest,
And frugal fate, that guards the rest,
By giving, bids us live to-day. Fenton.

DA'YBED. n. f. [day and bed.] A bed used for idleness and luxury in the daytime.

Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown;
having come down from a daybed, where I have left Olivia sleeping. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

DA'YBOOK. n. f. [from day and book.] A tradesman's journal;
a book in which all the occurrences of the day are set down.

DA'YBREAK. n. f. [day and break.] The dawn; the first appearance of light.

I watch'd the early glories of her eyes,
As men for daybreak watch the Eastern skies. Dryd. In. Emp.

DAYLA'BOUR. n. f. [day and labour.] Labour by the day;
labour divided into daily tasks.

Doth God exact daylabour, light deny'd,
I fondly ask. Milton's Paradise Regained.

Did either his legs or his arms fail him? No; but daylabour was but an hard and a dry kind of livelihood to a man, that could get an estate with two or three strokes of his pen. South.

DAYLA'BOURER. n. f. [from daylabour.] One that works by the day.

In one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn
That ten daylabourers could not end. Milton.

The daylabourer, in a country village, has commonly but a small pittance of courage. Locke.

DA'YLIGHT. n. f. [day and light.] The light of the day, as opposed to that of the morn, or a taper.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to sad succeeding night. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Nay, then thou mock'st me: thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see.

Now go thy way. Shakespeare's Midsummer-Night's Dream.

They, by daylight passing through the midst of the Turks fleet, safely recovered the haven, to the great joy of the besieged Christians. Knolles's History of the Turks.

He stands in daylight, and disdains to hide
An act, to which by honour he is ty'd. Dryden:

Will you murder a man in plain daylight? Dryd. Sp. Fryar.
Yet though rough bears in covert seek defence,

White foxes stay, with seeming innocence;
That crafty kind with daylight can dispense. Dryden.

If bodies be illuminated by the ordinary prismatick colours, they will appear neither of their own daylight colours, nor of the colour of the light cast on them, but of some middle colour between both. Newton's Opt.

DAY-LI'LY. n. f. The same with ASPHODEL, which see.

DA'YSMAN. n. f. [day and man.] An old word for umpire. Ans.
Perhaps rather, surety.

For what art thou,
That mak'st thyself his daysman, to prolong
The vengeance prest? Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 8.

DA'YSPRING.

DEA

DA'YSPRING. n. f. [day and spring.] The rise of the day; the dawn; the first appearance of light.

So all ere dayspring, under conscious night,
Secret they finish'd, and in order set. Milton's Parad. Lost.
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With dayspring born, here leave me to respire. Milt. Agon.

DA'YSTAR. n. f. [day and star.] The morning star.
I meant to make her fair, and free, and wife,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great:
I meant the daystar should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat. Ben. Johnson.
Sunk though he be beneath the watry floor;
So sinks the daystar in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head. Milton.

DA'YTIME. n. f. [day and time.] The time in which there is light, opposed to night.
In the daytime she sitteth in a watch-tower, and flieth most by night; that she mingleth things done with things not done, and that she is a terror to great cities. Bacon, Essay 60.

My ants never brought out their corn but in the night when the moon did shine, and kept it under ground in the daytime. Addison's Guardian, No. 156.

DA'YWORK. n. f. [day and work.] Work imposed by the day; day labour.

True labour in the vineyard of thy lord,
Ere prime thou hast th' imposed daywork done. Fairfax.

TO DAZE. v. a. [ðæz, Saxon.] To overpower with light; to strike with too strong lustre; to hinder the act of seeing by too much light suddenly introduced.

They smote the glistering armies as they stand,
With quiv'ring beams, which daz'd the wond'ring eye. Fairfax, b. i. Stan. 73.

Poor human kind, all daz'd in open day,
Err after bliss, and blindly miss their way. Dryden.

DA'ZIED. adj. [rather dazied. See DASY.] Besprinkled with daisies.

Let us

Find out the prettiest dazied plot we can,
And make him a grave. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO DAZZLE. v. a. [See DAZE.]

1. To overpower with light; to hinder the action of the sight by sudden lustre.

Fears use, many times, to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them. Bacon's War with Spain.

How is it that some wits are interrupted;
That now they dazzled are, now clearly see? Davies.

The places that have either shining sentiments or manners, have no occasion for them: a dazzling expression rather damages them, and serves only to eclipse their beauty. Pope.

2. To strike or surprise with splendour.

Those heav'nly shapes

Will dazzle now this earthly, with their blaze
Insufferably bright. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 1083.

Ah, friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, or touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

TO DAZZLE. v. n. To be overpowered with light; to lose the power of sight.

Dazzle mine eyes? or do I see three suns? Shak. Hen. VI.

Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young,

And you shall read, when mine begins to dazzle. Shakespeare.

An oversight maketh the eyes dazzle, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.

Look, Dianet, for I dare not trust these eyes;

They dance in mists, and dazzle with surprise. Dryd. Auren.

DEACON. n. f. [diaconus, Latin.]

1. One of the lowest order of the clergy.

Likewise must the deacons be grave. 2 Tim. iii. 8.

The constitutions that the apostles made concerning deacons and widows, in those primitive times, are very importunately urged by the disciplinarians. Bp. Sanderson's Judgment.

2. [In Scotland.] An overseer of the poor.

3. And also the master of an incorporated company.

DE'ACONESS. n. f. [from deacon.] A female officer in the ancient church.

All, all but truth, drops dead-born from the press,

Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope, Dial. ii.

4. Imitating death; senseless; motionless.

DEA

At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep. Pf. lxxvi. 6.

Anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and backbone, we know is used for procuring dead sleeps. Bacon's Nat. History.

5. Unactive; motionless.

The tin fold sometimes higher, and sometimes lower, according to the quick vent and abundance, or the dead sale and scarcity. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Nay, there's a time when ev'n the rolling year

Seems to stand still: dead calms are in the ocean;

When not a breath disturbs the drowsy main. Lee's Oedipus.

They cannot bear the dead weight of unemployed time lying upon their hands, nor the uneasiness it is to do nothing at all. Locke on Education, sect. 207.

6. Empty; vacant.

This colour, nevertheless, often carries the mind away; yea, it deceiveth the sense; and it seemeth to the eye a shorter distance of way, if it be all dead and continued, than if it have trees or buildings, or any other marks whereby the eye may divide it. Bacon's C. l. of Good and Evil.

Nought but a blank remains, and a dead void space,

A step of life, that promis'd such a race. Dryden.

7. Ufeless; unprofitable.

The commodities of the kingdom they took, though they lay dead upon their hands for want of vent. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Persuade a prince that he is irresistible, and he will take care not to let so glorious an attribute lie dead and usefess by him. Addison's Whig Examiner.

8. Dull; gloomy; unemployed.

Travelling over the mountain Amanus, then covered with deep snow, they came in the dead Winter to Aleppo in Syria. Knolles's History of the Turks.

There is something unspeakably chearful in a spot of ground which is covered with trees, that smiles amidst all the rigours of Winter, and gives us a view of the most gay season in the midst of that which is the most dead and melancholy. Add. Spect.

9. Still; obscure.

Their flight was only deferred until they might cover their disorders by the dead darkness of the night. Hayward.

10. Having no resemblance of life.

At a second sitting, though I alter not the draught, I must touch the same features over again, and change the dead colouring of the whole. Dryden's Fab. Preface.

11. Obtuse; dull; not sprightly. Used of sounds.

We took a bell of about two inches in diameter at the bottom, which was supported, in the midst of the cavity of the receiver, by a bent stick, by reason of its spring against the opposite parts of the inside of the vessel; in which, when it was closed up, we observed that the bell seemed to sound more dead than it did when just before it sounded in the open air. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

12. Dull; frigid; not animated; not affecting.

How cold and dead does a prayer appear, that is composed in the most elegant forms of speech, when it is not heightened by solemnity of phrase from the sacred writings. Add. Spect.

13. Tasteless; vapid; spiritless: of liquors.

14. Uninhabited.

Somewhat is left under dead walls and dry ditches. Arbuthn.

The dead inspir'd with vital life again. Dryd. Æn. b. vii.

The ancient Romans generally buried their dead near the great roads. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

That the dead shall rise and live again, is beyond the discovery of reason, and is purely a matter of faith. Locke.

The tow'ring bard had sung in nobler lays,

How the last trumpet wakes the lazy dead. Smith.

DEAD. n. f. Time in which there is remarkable stillness or gloom; as at midwinter, and midnight.

After this life, to hope for the favours of mercy then, is to expect an harvest in the dead of winter. South's Sermons.

In the dead of the night, when the men and their dogs were all fast asleep. L'Estrange.

At length, in dead of night, the ghost appears

Of her unhappy lord. Dryden's Virg. Æn.

TO DEAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To lose force, of whatever kind.

So iron, as soon as it is out of the fire, deadeth straitways. Bacon's Natural History, No. 774.

TO DEAD. } v. a.

TO DE'ADEN. } v. a.

1. To deprive of any kind of force or sensation.

That the sound may be extinguished or *dead*ed by discharging the pent air, before it cometh to the mouth of the piece, and to the open air, is not probable. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, stretched, otherwise the laxness of that membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound. Holder's Elements of Speech.

This motion would be quickly deadened by countermotions; and we should not remember any thing, but 'till the next impression. Glanv. Sceps. c. 6.

We will not oppose any thing to them that is hard and stubborn, but by a soft answer deaden their force by degrees. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Our dreams are great instances of that activity which is natural to the human soul, and which is not in the power of sleep to deaden or abate. Spectator, N. 487.

Anodyne, or abaters of pain, are such things as relax the tension of the affected nervous fibres, or destroy the particular acrimony which occasions the pain, or what deadens the sensation of the brain by procuring sleep. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To make vapid, or spiritless.

The beer and the wine, as well within water as above, have not been palled or deaded at all. Bacon's Natural History.

DEAD-DOING. participial adj. [dead and do.] Destructive; killing; mischievous; having the power to make dead.

Hold, O dear lord, your dead-doing hand;

Then loud he cry'd, I am your humble thrall. Fai. Queen.

They never care how many others

They kill, without regard of mothers,

Or wives or children, so they can

Make up some fierce, dead-doing man. Hudibras, p. i. can. II.

DEAD-LIFT. n. f. [dead and lift.] Hopeless exigence.

And have no power at all, nor shift,

To help itself at a dead-lift. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.

DE'ADLY. adj. [from dead.]

DE'ADNETTLE. n. f. A weed; the same with archangel.

DEAD-RECKONING. n. f. [a sea-term.] That estimation or conjecture which the seamen make of the place where a ship is, by keeping an account of her way by the log, by knowing the course they have steered by the compass, and by rectifying all with allowance for drift or lee-way; so that this reckoning is without any observation of the sun, moon, and stars, and is to be rectified as often as any good observation can be had.

DEAF. adj. [deaf, Dutch.]

1. Wanting the sense of hearing.

Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf. Shakespeare.

Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shak. Mac.

The chief design here intended by this account of the natural alphabet, is to prepare a more easy and expedite way to instruct such as are deaf and dumb, and dumb only by consequence of their want of hearing. Holder's Elem. of Speech.

If any sins afflict our life

With that prime ill, a talking wife,

'Till death shall bring the kind relief,

We must be patient, or be deaf. Prior.

Thus you may still be young to me,

While I can better hear than see:

Oh ne'er may fortune shew her spight,

To make me deaf, and mend my sight. Swift.

2. It has to before the thing that ought to be heard.

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;

Nor tears, nor prayers shall purchase out abuses. Shakespeare.

Oh, that men's ears should be

To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! Shakespeare's Timon.

Whilst virtue courts them; but, alas, in vain:

Fly from her kind embracing arms,

Deaf to her fondest call, blind to her greatest charms. Rosc.

Not so, for once indulg'd, they sweep the main;

Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain. Dryden.

Hope, too long with vain delusion fed,

Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,

Gives to the roll of death his glorious name. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Deprived of the power of hearing.

Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight:

No mortal courage can support the fright. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

4. Obscurely heard.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,

But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;

Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow roar

Of tides, receding from th' insulted shoar. Dryden.

The rest were seiz'd with sullen discontent,

And a deaf murmur through the squadrons went. Dryden.

TO DEAF. v. a. To deprive of the power of hearing.

Hearing hath deaf'd our sailors; and if they Know how to hear, there's none know what to say. Donne.

A swarm of their aerial shapes appears,

And, flutt'ring round his temples, deaf's his ears. Dryd. En.

TO DE'AFEN. v. a. [from deaf.] To deprive of the power of hearing.

But Salius enters; and exclaiming loud,

For justice deafens, and disturbs the crowd. Dryden's Virgil.

From shouting men, and horns, and dogs, he flies,

Deafen'd and stunn'd with their promiscuous cries. Addison.

DE'AFLY. adv. [from deaf.]

1. Without sense of sounds.

2. Obscurely to the ear.

DE'AFNESS. n. f. [from deaf.] Want of the power of hearing; want of sense of sounds.

Those who are deaf and dumb, are dumb by consequence from their deafness. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The Dunciad had never been writ, but at his request, and for his deafness; for had he been able to converse with me, do you think I had amused my time so ill? Pope.

2. Unwillingness to hear.

I found such a deafness, that no declaration from the bishops could take place. King Charles.

DEAL. n. f. [deal, Dutch.]

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church. Hooker, b. 4. sect. 14.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It is a general word for expressing much joined with the word great.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest a great deal than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintainance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth. Hooker, Preface.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in. Hooker, b. iv.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deal;

But sorrow, flouted at, is double death. Shakesp. Tit. Andron.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

The charge, some deal thee haply honour may,

That noble Dudone had while here he liv'd. Fairfax, b. v.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, let them rest assured, that they have so much the more reason a great deal to doubt of it. South's Sermons.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause, by throwing his thoughts together in a studied confusion. Addison's Freeholder, N. 31.

3. The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid support,

Unskill'd in all the terms of art!

Or in harmonious numbers put

The deal, the shuffle, and the cut. Swift.

4. [deyl, Dutch.] Firwood; the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely interposed betwixt my eye, placed in a room; and the clearer daylight was not only only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lovely red.

Boyle on Colours.

To DEAL. v. a. [deelen, Dutch.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out, to thy house. Isa. lviii. 7.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryd. Fab.

The business of mankind in this life, being rather to act than to know, their portion of knowledge is dealt them accordingly. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 237.

How Spain prepares her banners to unfold,

And Rome deals out her blessings and her gold. Tickell.

Had the philosophers and great men of antiquity been possessed of the art of printing, there is no question but they would have made an advantage of it, in dealing out their lectures to the publick. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 184.

If you deal out great quantities of strong liquor to the mob, there will be many drunk. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. To scatter; to throw about.

Keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,

Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,

When hissing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden's Fables.

3. To give gradually, or one after another.

The nightly mallet deals resounding blows,

'Till the proud battlements her towers inclose. Gay.

His lifted arms around his head he throws,

And deals, in whistling air, his empty blows. Dryd. Virgil.

To DEAL. v. n.

1. To traffick; to transact business; to trade.

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by the mediation of a third, than by a man himself. Bacon.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels. Decay of Piety.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick. South.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. Bacon, Essay 55.

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.

I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true. Tillotson's Sermons.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,

Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shakesp. R. III.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright. Locke.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suiters are so distast'd with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. Bacon, Essay 59.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they propos'd to themselves in it. Atterbury's Sermons.

Among all sets of authors, there are none who draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 40.

True logick is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute and wrangling, to which the former ages had debas'd and confin'd it. Watts's Logick.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them. Spenser's Ireland.

Who then shall guide

His people? Who defend? Will they not deal

Worse with his followers, than with him they dealt? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that. South's Sermons.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations. Tillotson.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryd. Fab. Preface.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles. Pope.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who had been thus dealt with by their country. Swift.

8. To DEAL with. To contend with.

If she hated me, I should know what passion to deal with. Sidney, b. ii.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they stand in fear. Hayward.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleas'd to see

You're not so perfect, but can fail like me:

I have no God to deal with. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

To DEALBATE. v. a. [dealbo, Lat.] To whiten; to bleach.

DEALBATION. n. f. [dealbatio, Lat.] The act of bleaching or whitening; rendering things white, which were not so before: a word which is now almost grown into disuse.

All seed is white in viviparous animals, and such as have preparing vessels, wherein it receives a manifold dealbation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.

DEALER. n. f. [from deal.]

1. One that has to do with any thing.

I find it common with these small dealers in wit and learning, to give themselves a title from their first adventure. Swift.

2. A trader or trafficker.

Where fraud is permitted and conniv'd at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. Gulliver's Travels.

3. A person who deals the cards.

DEALING. n. f. [from deal.]

1. Practice; action.

What these are!

Whose own hard dealings teach them to suspect

The thoughts of others. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven. Hooker, b. ii.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Intercourse.

It were to be wish'd, that men would promote it to the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie more immediately within their influence. Addis.

3. Measure of treatment; rules by which one treats another.

God's gracious dealings with men, are the aids and auxiliaries necessary to us in the pursuit of piety. Hammond's Fundam.

4. Traffick; business.

The doctor must needs die rich; he had great dealings in his way for many years. Swift's Bickerstaff detected.

DEAMBULATION. n. f. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DEAMBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Latin.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. f. [decanus, Latin; doyen, French.]

From the Greek word dēna; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbeys, transformed from abbot or prior, and convent to dean and chapter) so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his Congé d'aire to the chapter, the chapter then choosing, the king yielding his royal assent, and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to instal them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patents, without either election or confirmation. This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowel.

The dean and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use in the church: they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for his government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

DEANERY. n. f. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.

When he could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal, he made him his successor in that near attendance upon the king. Clarendon.

2. The revenue of a dean.

Put both deans in one; or, if that's too much trouble,

Instead of the deans, make the deanry double. Swift.

3. The house of a dean.

Take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery; and dispatch it quickly. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

DEANSHIP. n. f. [from dean.] The office and rank of a dean.

DEAR. adj. [deor, Saxon.]

1. Beloved; favourite; darling.

Your brother Glo'ster hates you.

—Oh, no, he loves me, and he holds me dear. Shak. R. III.

The dear, dear name she bathes in flowing tears,

Hangs o'er the tomb. Addison's Ovid. Metam. b. ii.

And the last joy was dearer than the rest. Pope.

2. Valuable; of a high price; costly.

What made directors cheat the South sea year?

To feed on ven'son when it sold so dear. Pope.

3. Scarce; not plentiful; as, a dear year.

It seems to be sometimes used in Shakespeare for deer; sad; hateful; grievous.

What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,

DEA

DEA

Whom thou in terms so bloody, and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril. Shakespeare's Timon.

Some dear cause
Will in concealment wrap me up a-while:
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve Lending me this acquaintance. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Would I had met my dearest foe in heav'n,
Or ever I had seen that day. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Thy other banish'd son, with this dear fight Struck pale and bloodless. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

DEAR. n. f. A word of endearment.
That kifs
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Go, dear; each minute does new danger bring. Dryden.

See, my dear,
How lavish nature has adorn'd the year. Dryden.
DE'ARBOUGHT. adj. [dear and bought.] Purchased at an high price.

O fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dearbought with lasting woe. Milton's Par. Lost.
Such dearbought blessings happen ev'ry day,
Because we know not for what things to pray. Dryd. Fables.
Forget not what my ransom cost,
Nor let my dearbought soul be lost. Roscommon.

DE'ARLING. n. f. [now written darling.] Favourite.
They do feed on nectar, heavenly wife,
With Hercules and Hebe, and the rest
Of Venus's dearlings, through her bounty blest. Spenser.

DE'ARLY. adv. [from dear.]
1. With great fondness.
For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he loved her dearly. Watton.

2. At an high price.
It is rarely bought, and then also bought dearly enough with such a fine. Bacon.

Turnus shall dearly pay for faith forsworn;
And corps, and swords, and shields, on Tyber born. Dryd.
My father dotes, and let him still dote on;
He buys his mistress dearly with his throne. Dryd. Aurengz.

TO DEARN. v. a. [dýnnan, Sax. to hide.] To mend cloaths.
See DARN.

DE'ARNESS. n. f. [from dear.]
1. Fondness; kindness; love.

My brother, I think, he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage. Shakespeare.
The whole senate dedicated an altar to friendship, as to a goddess, in respect of the great dearness of friendship between them two. Bacon, Essay 28.

He who hates his neighbour mortally, and wisely too, must profess all the dearness and friendship, with readiness to serve him. South's Sermons.

2. Scarcity; high price.
Landlords prohibit tenants from plowing, which is seen in the dearness of corn. Swift.

DE'ARNLY. adv. [deorn, Sax.] Secretly; privately; unseen.
Obsolete.

At last, as chanc'd them by a Forrest side
To pass, for succour from the scorching ray,
They heard a rueful voice, that dearly cry'd
With piercing shrieks. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 1. Stan. 35.

DEARTH. n. f. [from dear.]

1. Scarcity which makes food dear.
In times of dearth it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon to Villiers.

There have been terrible years dearths of corn, and every place is strewed with beggars; but dearths are common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift.

2. Want; need; famine.
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time. Shakespeare.

Of every tree that in the garden grows,
Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth. Milt. P. L.

3. Barrenness; sterility.
They have brought on themselves that dearth of plot, and narrowness of imagination, which may be observed in all their plays. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

joint; to dismember. Dict.

DEATH. n. f. [deaf, Saxon.]

1. The extinction of life; the departure of the soul from the body.

He is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inher-ritance. Heb. ix. 15.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity or death. Shakesf. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Death, a necessary end,

Will come, when it will come. Shakesf. Julius Caesar.
He must his acts reveal,

From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden's Æn. b. 6.

2. Mortality; destruction.
How did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. The state of the dead.
In swinish sleep

Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shakesf. Macbeth.

4. The manner of dying.
Thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas. Ex. xxviii. 8.

5. The image of mortality represented by a skeleton.
I had rather be married to a death's head, with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. Shakesf. Merch. of Venice.

If I gaze now, 'tis but to see
What manner of death's head 'twill be,

When it is free
From that fresh upper skin;

The gazer's joy, and sin. Suckling.

6. Murder, the act of destroying life unlawfully.
As in manifesting the sweet influence of his mercy, on the severe stroke of his justice; so in this, not to suffer a man of death to live. Bacon, Essay 14.

7. Cause of death.
They cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. 2 Kings, iv. 40.

He caught his death the last county-sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman. Addis. Spectat.

8. Destroyer.
All the endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, and be the death of him, is the intrigue which comprehends the battle of the last day. Pope's View of Epic Poetry.

9. [In poetry.] The instrument of death.
Deaths invisible come wing'd with fire;

They hear a dreadful noise, and straight expire. Dry. In. Em.
Sounded at once the bow; and swiftly flies
The feather'd death, and hisses through the skies. Dryd. Æn.

Oft, as in airy rings they skim the Heath,
The clam'rous plovers feel the leaden death. Pope.

10. [In theology.] Damnation; eternal torments.
We pray that God will keep us from all sin and wickedness, from our ghostly enemy, and from everlasting death.

Church Catechism.

DEATH-BED. n. f. [death and bed.] The bed to which a man is confined by mortal sickness.

Sweet soul, take heed, take heed of perjury;
Thou art on thy death-bed. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land,
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick. Shakesf. Richard II.

These are such things as a man shall remember with joy upon his death-bed; such as shall cheer and warm his heart, even in that last and bitter agony. South's Sermons.

Then round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won. Dryden's Fables.

A death-bed figure is certainly the most humbling sight in the world. Collier on the Value of Life.

A death-bed repentance ought not indeed to be neglected, because it is the last thing that we can do. Atterbury's Serm.

Fame can never make us lie down contentedly on a deathbed. Pope.

DE'ATHFUL. adj. [death and full.] Full of slaughter; destructive; murderous.

Your cruelty was such, as you would spare his life for many deathful torments. Sidney, b. ii.

Time itself, under the deathful shade of whose wings all things wither, hath wasted that lively virtue of nature in man and beasts, and plants. Raleigh's History of the World.

Blood, death, and deathful deeds are in that noise,
Ruin, destruction at the utmost point. Milton's Agonist.

These eyes behold
The deathful scene; princes on princes roll'd. Pope's Odyss.

DE'ATHLESS. adj. [from death.] Immortal; neverdying;

The same boats and the same buildings are found in countries two thousand miles distant, debarred from all commerce by unpassable mountains, lakes and deserts. Raleigh's Essays.

Not so strictly hath our Lord impos'd
Labour, as to debar us when we need
Refreshment, whether food, or talk between,
Food of the mind. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 236.

Civility, intended to make us easy, is employed in laying chains and fetters upon us, in debarring us of our wishes, and in crossing our most reasonable desires. Swift's Examiner.

TO DEBA'SE. v. a. [from base.]

1. To reduce from a higher to a lower state.
Homer intended to teach, that pleasure and sensuality debase men into beasts. Notes on the Odyssey.
As much as you raise silver, you debase gold; for they are in the condition of two things, put in opposite scales; as much as the one rises, the other falls. Locke.
2. To make mean; to degenerate; to sink into meanness; to make despicable.
It is a kind of taking God's name in vain, to debase religion with such frivolous disputes. Hooker, b. v. sect. 30.
A man of large possessions has not leisure to consider of every slight expence, and will not debase himself to the management of every trifle. Dryden.
Restraining others, yet himself not free;
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity. Dryden.
3. To sink; to vitiate with meanness.
He ought to be careful of not letting his subject debase his style, and betray him into a meanness of expression. Addison.
4. To adulterate; to lessen in value by base admixtures.
He reformed the coin, which was much adulterated and debas'd in the times and troubles of king Stephen. Hale.
Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

DEBA'SEMENT. n. f. [from debase.] The act of debasing or degrading.
It is a wretched debasement of that sprightly faculty, the tongue, thus to be made the interpreter to a goat or boar.
Government of the Tongue, sect. 12.

DEBA'SER. n. f. [from debase.] He that debases; he that adulterates; he that degrades another; he that sinks the value of things, or destroys the dignity of persons.

DEBA'TABLE. adj. [from debate.] Disputable; that which is, or may be, subject to controversy.
The French requested, that the fishing of Tweede, the debatable ground, and the Scottish hostages, might be restored to the Scots. Hayward.

A DEBA'TE. n. f. [debat, French.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.
Another way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgments, and receive their opinion in debate, is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to assign a better. Locke.
It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with debate and controversy. Watts's Logick.
2. A quarrel; a contest.
Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Shak. H. IV.
'Tis thine to ruin realms, o'erturn a state;
Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate. Dryden's Æn.

D E B

TO DEBA'TE. v. a. [debatre, French.] To controvert; to dispute; to contest.
Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself, and discover not a secret to another. Prov. xxv. 9.
He could not debate any thing without some commotion, even when the argument was not of moment. Clarendon.

TO DEBATE. v. n.

1. To deliberate.
Your sev'ral suits
Have been consider'd and debated on. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He should the bearers put to sudden death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DEBA'TER. n. f. [from debate.] A disputant; a controvertist.

TO DEBA'UCH. [desbaucher, Fr. debacchari, Latin.]

1. To corrupt; to vitiate.
This it is to counsel things that are unjust; first, to debauch a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
2. To corrupt with lewdness.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. To corrupt by intemperance.
No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable for him to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality. Tillotson, Sermon 6.

DEBA'UCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A fit of intemperance; luxury; excess; lewdness.
He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; 'till within a little while he recovers his former debauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns. Calamy.
The first physicians by debauch were made;
Excess began, and sloth sustains the trade. Dryden's Fables.

DEBAUCHE'E. n. f. [from desbauché, French.] A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.
Could we but prevail with the greatest debauchees amongst us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments. South's Sermons.

DEBA'UCHER. n. f. [from debauch.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.

DEBA'UCHERY. n. f. [from debauch.] The practice of excess; intemperance; lewdness.
Oppose vices by their contrary virtues, hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Sprat's Sermons.
These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them. Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

DEBA'UCHMENT. n. f. [from debauch.] The act of debauching or vitiating; corruption.
They told them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens, or the debauchment of nations, or the extreme poverty of learned persons. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

TO DEBE'L. } v. a. [debello, Latin.] To conquer; to
TO DEBE'LLATE. } overcome in war.
It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debelling of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour. Bacon's Holy War.
Him long of old
Thou didst debel, and down from heaven cast
With all his army. Milton's Paradise Regained, b. iv.

DEBELLA'TION. n. f. [from debellatio, Lat.] The act of conquering in war.

DEBE'NTURE. n. f. [debentur, Latin, from debeo.] A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.
You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,
Have desperate debentures on your fame;
And little would be left you, I'm afraid,
If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid. Swift.

DE'BILE. adj. [debilis, Lat.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint; without strength; imbecile; impotent.
I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or foil'd some debile wretch, which without note
There's many else have done. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

TO DEBI'LITATE. v. a. [debilito, Latin.] To weaken; to make faint; to enfeeble; to emasculate.
In the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seem'd as weakly to fail as their debilitated posterity ever after. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. cant. 1.
The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of ventilating and purifying the blood, and debilitated in attracting nutriment for the parts. Harvey on Consumptions.

DEBILITA'TION. n. f. [from debilitatio, Lat.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin. K. Charles.
DEBILITY. n. f. [debilitas, Latin.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecillity.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
 And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

Aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to the inconveniencies of too strong a perspiration, which are debility, faintings, and sometimes sudden death. Arbuthn. on Alim.

DEBONAIRE. adj. [debonnaire, Fr.] Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant.

Crying, let be that lady debonair,
 Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare
 To battle, if thou mean her love to gain. Fairy Queen.

He met her once a maying,
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh blown roses wash'd in dew,
 Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
 So bucksom, blithe, and debonair. Milton.

The nature of the one is debonair and accostable; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightly, the other slow and saturnine. Howel's Vocal Forest.

And she that was not only passing fair,
 But was withal discreet and debonair,
 Resolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil. Dryden's Nun's Priest.

DEBONAIRLY. adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

DEBT. n. f. [debitum, Latin; dette, French.]

1. That which one man owes to another.

There was one that died greatly in debt: well, says one, if he be gone, then he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world. Bacon, Apophth. 141.

The debt of ten thousand talents, which the servant owed the king, was no slight ordinary sum. Duppa's Devotions.

To this great loss a sea of tears is due;
 But the whole debt not to be paid by you. Waller.

Above a thousand pounds in debt,
 Takes horse, and in a mighty fret
 Rides day and night. Swift.

2. That which any one is obliged to do or suffer.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
 He only liv'd but 'till he was a man,
 But like a man he died. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DEBTED. part. [from debt. To DEBT is not found.] Indebted; obliged to.

Which do amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman. Shak. Com. of Errors.

DEBTOR. n. f. [debitor, Latin.]

1. He that owes something to another.

I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wife and to the unwise. Ro. i. 14.

The case of debtors in Rome, for the first four centuries, was, after the set time for payment, no choice but either to pay, or be the creditor's slave. Swift.

2. One that owes money.

I'll bring your latter hazard back again,
 And thankfully rest debtor for the first. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

If he his ample palm
 Should hap'ly on ill-fated shoulder lay
 Of debtor, strait his body, to the touch
 Obsequious, as whilom knights were wont,
 To some enchanted castle is convey'd. Philips.

There dy'd my father, no man's debtor;
 And there I'll die, nor worse, nor better. Pope's Horace.

3. One side of an account-book.

When I look upon the debtor side, I find such innumerable articles, that I want arithmetick to cast them up; but when I look upon the creditor side, I find little more than blank paper. Addison's Spectator, No. 549.

DEBULLITION. n. f. [debullitio, Lat.] A bubbling or seething over. Dict.

DECACUMINATED. adj. [decacuminatus, Latin.] Having the top cut off. Dict.

DECADE. n. f. [δέκα, Gr. decas, Latin.] The sum of ten; a number containing ten.

Men were not only out in the number of some days, the latitude of a few years, but might be wide by whole olympiads, and divers decades of years. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decades, centuries, and chiliads, chiefly for the use of computations in history, chronology, and astronomy. Holder on Time.

All rank'd by ten; whole decades, when they dine,
 Must want a Trojan slave to pour the wine. Pope's Iliad.

DECADENCY. n. f. [decadence, French.] Decay; fall. Dict.

DECAGON. n. f. [from δέκα, ten, and γωνία, a corner.] A plain figure in geometry, having ten sides and angles.

TO DECA'Y. v. n. [decheoir, Fr. from de and cadere, Latin.] To lose excellence; to decline from the state of perfection; to be gradually impaired.

The monarch oak
 Three centuries grows, and three he stays
 Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

The garlands fade, the vows are worn away;
 So dies her love, and so my hopes decay. Pope.

TO DE'CAY. v. a. To impair; to bring to decay.

Infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make better the fool. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Cut off a stock of a tree, and lay that which you cut off to putrefy, to see whether it will decay the rest of the stock.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 995.
 He was of a very small and decayed fortune, and of no good education. Clarendon.

Decay'd by time and wars, they only prove Their former beauty by your former love. Dryden.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul decays the body. Addison's Guardian, No. 120.

DECA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Decline from the state of perfection; state of diminution:

What comfort to this great decay may come,
 Shall be applied. Shakespeare's King Lear.

She has been a fine lady, and paints and hides
 Her decays very well. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

And those decays, to speak the naked truth,
 Through the defects of age, were crimes of youth. Denham.

By reason of the tenacity of fluids, and attrition of their parts, and the weakness of elasticity in solids, motion is much more apt to be lost than got, and is always upon the decay. Newt.

Each may feel encreases and decays,
 And see now clearer and now darker days. Essay on Criticism.

Taught half by reason, half by mere decay,
 To welcome death, and calmly pass away. Pope.

2. The effects of diminution; the marks of decay.

They think, that whatever is called old must have the decay of time upon it, and truth too were liable to mould and rottenness. Locke.

3. Declension from prosperity.

And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt relieve him. Levit. xxv. 35.

I am the very man,
 That, from your first of difference and decay,
 Have follow'd your sad steps. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DEC'AYER. n. f. [from decay.] That which causes decay.

Your water is a fore decayer of your whorson dead body. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DECE'ASE. n. f. [decessus, Lat.] Death; departure from life.

Lands are by human law, in some places, after the owner's decease, divided unto all his children; in some, all descendeth to the eldest son. Hooker, b. i. sect. 10.

TO DECE'ASE. v. n. [decedo, Latin.] To die; to depart from life.

He tells us Arthur is deceas'd to-night. Shakesf. King John.
 You shall die

Twice now, where others, that mortality
 In her fair arms holds, shall but once decease. Chapm. Odyss.

His latest victories still thickest came,
 As, near the centre, motion doth increase:

'Till he, press'd down by his own weighty name,
 Did, like the vestal, under spoils decease. Dryden.

DECE'IT. n. f. [deceptio, Latin.]

1. Fraud; a cheat; a fallacy; any practice by which falsehood is made to pass for truth.

My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit. Job, xxvii. 4.

2. Stratagem; artifice.

His demand
 Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love,
 But from deceit, bred by necessity. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. [In law.] A subtle wily shift or device; all manner of craft, subtilty, guile, fraud, wiliness, slightness, cunning, covin, collusion, practice and offence, used to deceive another man by any means, which hath no other proper or particular name but offence. C. vel.

DECE'ITFUL,

DECEITFUL. adj. [deceit and full.] Fraudulent; full of deceit.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The lovely young Lavinia once had friends,
And fortune smil'd, deceitful, on her birth. Thomson's Autumn.

DECEITFULLY. adv. [from deceitful.] Fraudulently; with deceit.

Exercise of form may be deceitfully dispatched of course. Wotton.

DECEITFULNESS. n. f. [from deceitful.] The quality of being fraudulent; tendency to deceive.

The care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful. Mat. xiii. 22.

DECEIVABLE. adj. [from deceive.]

1. Subject to fraud; exposed to imposture.

Man was not only deceivable in his integrity, but the angels of light in all their clarity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 1.

How would thou use me now, blind, and thereby
Deceivable, in most things as a child
Helpless; hence easily contemn'd and scorn'd,
And last neglected. Milton's Agonistes, l. 938.

2. Subject to produce error; deceitful.

It is good to consider of deformity, not as a sign, which is more deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon's Essays.

He received nothing but fair promises, which proved deceivable. Hayward.

O everfailing trust

In mortal strength! And oh, what not in man
Deceivable and vain? Milton's Agonistes, l. 348.

DECEIVABLENESS. n. f. [from deceivable.] Liableness to be deceived.

He that has a great patron, has the advantage of his negligence and deceivableness. Government of the Tongue, f. 8.

TO DECEIVE. v. a. [decipio, Latin.]

1. To cause to mistake; to bring into error; to impose upon.

Some have been apt to be deceived into an opinion, that there was a natural or divine right of primogeniture to both estate and power. Locke.

2. To delude by stratagem.

3. To cut off from expectation.

The Turkish general, deceived of his expectation, withdrew his fleet twelve miles off. Knolles's History of the Turks.

I now believ'd

The happy day approach'd, nor are my hopes deceiv'd. Dryd.

4. To mock; to fail.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes,
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats. Dryd. Æn.

DECEIVER. n. f. [from deceive.] One that leads another into error; a cheat.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more;

Men were deceivers ever:

One foot in sea, and one on shore;

To one thing constant never. Shak. Much ado about Nothing.

As for his dismissal out of France, they interpreted it not as if he were detected, or neglected for a counterfeit de- ceiver. Bacon's Henry VII.

Those voices, actions or gestures, which men have not by any compact agreed to make the instruments of conveying their thoughts one to another, are not the proper instruments of deceiving, so as to denominate the person using them a liar or deceiver. South's Sermons.

It is to be admired how any deceiver can be so weak to foretel things near at hand, when a very few months must of necessity discover the imposture. Swift's Predictions.

Adieu, the heart-expanding bowl;

And all the kind deceivers of the soul. Pope's Horace.

DECEMBER. n. f. [december, Latin.] The last month of the year; but named december, or the tenth month, when the year began in March.

Men are April when they woo, and December when they
wed. Shakespeare's As you like it.

What should we speak of,

When we are old as you? When we shall hear

The rain and wind beat dark December. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

DECEMPEDAL. adj. [from decempeda, Latin.] Ten feet in length. Dict.

DECEMVIRATE. n. f. [decemviratus, Lat.] The dignity and office of the ten governors of Rome, who were appointed to rule the commonwealth instead of consuls. Their authority subsisted only two years.

DECENCE. } n. f. [decence, French; decet, Latin.]

DECENCY. }

1. Propriety of form; proper formality; becoming ceremony.

Those thousand decencies, that daily flow

From all her words and actions. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In good works there may be goodness in the general; but decence and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good. Sprat's Sermons.

VOL. I.

Were the offices of religion stript of all the external de- cencies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them. Atterbury's Sermons.

She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;

But never, never reached gen'rous thought:

Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,

Content to dwell in decencies for ever. Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.

And must I own, she said, my secret smart?

What with more decence were in silence kept. Dryden's Æn.

The next consideration, immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing; what is suitable or unsuitable to it; and from this springs the notion of decency or indecency, that which becomes or mis-becomes. South's Sermons.

Sentiments which raise laughter, can very seldom be admitted with any decency into an heroic poem. Addis. Spectat.

3. Modesty; not ribaldry; not obscenity.

Immodest words admit of no defence;

For want of decency is want of sense. Roscommon.

DECENNIAL. adj. [from decennium, Latin.] What continues for the space of ten years.

DECENNOVAL. } adj. [decem and novem, Latin.] Relating
DECENNOVARY. } to the number nineteen.

Meton, of old, in the time of the Peloponesian war, constituted a decennoval circle, or of nineteen years; the same which we now call the golden-number. Holder on Time.

Seven months are retrenched in this whole decennovary progress of the epochs, to reduce the accounts of her motion and place to those of the sun. Holder on Time.

DECENT. adj. [decens, Lat.] Becoming; fit; suitable.

Since there must be ornaments both in painting and poetry, if they are not necessary, they must at least be decent; that is,
in their due place, and but moderately used. Dryden.

DECENTLY. adv. [from decent.] In a proper manner; with suitable behaviour; without meanness or ostentation.

They could not decently refuse assistance to a person, who had punished those who had insulted their relation. Broome.

2. Without immodesty.

Past hope of safety, 'twas his latest care,

Like falling Cæsar, decently to die. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

He performs what friendship, justice, truth require;

What could he more, but decently retire? Swift.

DECEPTIBILITY. n. f. [from deceit.] Liableness to be deceived.

Some errors are so fleshed in us, that they maintain their interest upon the deceptibility of our decayed natures. Glasville.

DECEPTIBLE. adj. [from deceit.] Liable to be deceived; open to imposture; subject to fraud.

The first and father cause of common error, is the common infirmity of human nature; of whose deceptible condition, perhaps, there should not need any other eviotion than the frequent errors we shall ourselves commit. Brown.

DECEPTION. n. f. [deceptio, Latin.]

1. The act or means of deceiving; cheat; fraud; fallacy.

Being thus divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception. Brown's Vulgar Err.

All deception is a misapplying of those signs, which, by compact or institution, were made the means of mens signifying or conveying their thoughts. South's Sermons.

2. The state of being deceived.

Reason, not possibly, may meet

Some specious object by the foe suborn'd,

And fall into deception unaware. Milton's Paradise Lost.

DECEPTIOUS. adj. [from deceit.] Deceitful; apt to deceive.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,

That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears;

As if those organs had deceptious functions,

Created only to calumniate. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.

DECEPTIVE. adj. [from deceit.] Having the power of deceiving. Dict.

DECEPTORY. adj. [from deceit.] Containing means of deceit. Dict.

charm; to disenchanted.

Notwithstanding the help of physick, he was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey on Consumptions.

TO DECIDE. v. a. [decido, Latin.]

1. To fix the event of; to determine.

The day approach'd when fortune should decide

Th' important enterprize, and give the bride. Dryd. Fables.

2. To determine a question or dispute.

In council oft, and oft in battle tried,

Betwixt thy master and the world decide. Granville.

Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
And soundest casuists doubt?

Pope.

DE'CIDENCE. n. f. [decido, Latin.]

1. The quality of being shed, or of falling off.
2. The act of falling away.

Men observing the decidence of their horn, do fall upon the conceit that it annually rotteth away, and successively reneweth again.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 7.

DECI'DER. n. f. [from decide.]

1. One who determines causes.

I cannot think that a jester or a monkey, a droll or a puppet, can be proper judges or deciders of controversy.

Diſt.

DE'CIMAL. adj. [decimus, Latin.] Numbered by ten; multiplied by ten.

In the way we take now to name numbers by millions of millions of millions, it is hard to go beyond eighteen, or, at most, four and twenty decimal progressions, without confusion.

Locke.

To DE'CIMATE. v. a. [decimus, Latin.] To tithe; to take the tenth.

DECIMA'TION. n. f. [from decimate.]

1. A tithing; a selection of every tenth by lot or otherwise.
2. A selection by lot of every tenth soldier, in a general mutiny, for punishment.

By decimation and a tithed death,

Take thou the destin'd tenth.

Shakespeare's Timon.

A decimation I will strictly make

Of all who my Charinus did forsake;

And of each legion each centurion shall die.

Dryden.

To DECIPHER. v. a. [dechiffer, French.]

1. To explain that which is written in ciphers.

Zelmane, that had the same character in her heart, could easily decipher it; and therefore, to keep him the longer in speech, desired to know the conclusion of the matter, and how the honest Dametas was escaped.

Sidney.

Affurance is writ in a private character, not to be read, nor understood, but by the conscience, to which the spirit of God has vouchsafed to decipher it.

South's Sermons.

2. To write out; to mark down in characters.

Could I give you a lively representation of guilt and horror on this hand, and paint out eternal wrath, and decipher eternal vengeance on the other, then might I shew you the condition of a sinner hearing himself denied by Christ.

South.

Then were laws of necessity invented, that so every particular subject might find his principal pleasure, deciphered unto him, in the tables of his laws.

Locke.

3. To stamp; to characterise; to mark.

You are both decipher'd

For villains mark'd with rape.

Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

4. To unfold; to unravel; as, to decipher a perplexed affair.

DECIPHERER. n. f. [from decipher.] One who explains writings in cypher.

DECI'SION. n. f. [from decide.]

1. Determination of a difference.

Pleasure and revenge

Have ears more deaf than adders, to the voice

Of any true decision.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The great number of the undertakers, the worth of some of them, and their zeal to bring the matter to a decision, are sure arguments of the dignity and importance of it.

Woodward.

War is a direct appeal to God for the decision of some dispute, which can by no other means be possibly determined.

Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Determination of an event.

The time approaches,

That will with due decision make us know

What we shall say we have, and what we owe.

Shak. Macb.

Their arms are to the last decision bent,

And fortune labours with the vast event.

Dryden's Aurengz.

3. It is used in Scotland for a narrative, or reports of the proceedings of the court of session there.

DECI'SIVE. adj. [from decide.]

1. Having the power of determining any difference.

Such a reflection, though it carries nothing perfectly decisive in it, yet creates a mighty confidence in his breast, and strengthens him much in his opinion.

Atterbury's Sermons.

This they are ready to look upon as a determination on their side, and decisive of the controversy between vice and virtue.

Rogers's Sermons.

2. Having the power of settling any event.

For on th' event,

Decisive of this bloody day, depends

The fate of kingdoms.

Philips.

DECI'SIVENESS. n. f. [from decisive.] The power of terminating any difference, or settling an event.

DECI'SORY. adj. [from decide.] Able to determine or decide.

To DECK. v. a. [decken, Dutch.]

1. To cover; to overspread.

Ye mists and exhalations, that now rise

From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,

'Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,

In honour to the world's great Author, rise!

Whether to deck with clouds th' uncolour'd sky,

Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,

Rising or falling, still advance his praise.

Milt. Par. Lost.

2. To dress; to array.

Sweet ornament! that decks a thing divine.

Shakespeare.

Long may'st thou live to wail thy children's loss,

And see another, as I see thee now,

Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine.

Sh. R. III.

She sets to work millions of spinning worms,

That in their green shops weave the smooth-hair'd silk,

To deck her sons.

Milton.

3. To adorn; to embellish.

But direful, deadly black, both leaf and bloom,

Fit to adorn the head, and deck the dreary tomb.

Fai. Queen.

Now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,

A sweeter spot of earth was never found.

Dryden.

The god shall to his vot'ries tell

Each conscious tear, each blushing grace,

That deck'd dear Eloisa's face.

Prior.

DECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The floor of a ship.

Her keel plows hell,

And deck knocks heaven.

B. Johnson.

We have also raised our second decks, and given more vent thereby to our ordinance, trying on our nether overloop.

Ralei.

If any, born and bred under deck, had no other information but what sense affords, he would be of opinion that the ship was as stable as a house.

Glanv. Sceps. c. 11.

On high-raisd decks the haughty Belgians ride,

Beneath whose shade our humble frigates go.

Dryden.

Day to night they bring,

With hymns and peans, to the Bowyer king:

At sun-set to their ship they make return,

And snore secure on decks 'till rosy morn.

Dryden's Iliad.

2. Pack of cards piled regularly on each other.

Besides gems, many other sorts of stones are regularly figured: the Amianthus, of parallel threads, as in the pile of velvet; and the Selenites, of parallel plates, as in a deck of cards.

Grew's Cosmol. b. i. c. 2.

DE'CKER. n. f. [from deck.] A dresser; one that apparels or adorns; a coverer.

To DECLAIM. v. n. [declamo, Latin.] To harangue; to speak to the passions; to rhetoricate; to speak set orations.

What are his mischiefs, consul? You declaim

Against his manners, and corrupt your own.

B. Johns. Cat.

The splendid declaimings of novices and men of heat.

South.

It is usual for masters to make their boys declaim on both sides of an argument.

Swift.

Dress up all the virtues in the beauties of oratory, and declaim aloud on the praise of goodness.

Watts's Improvement.

DECLAIMER. n. f. [from declaim.] One who makes speeches with intent to move the passions.

Your Salamander is a perpetual declaimer against jealousy.

Addison's Spectator, No. 198.

DECLAMA'TION. n. f. [declamatio, Latin.] A discourse addressed to the passions; an harangue; a set speech; a piece of rhetoric.

The cause why declamations prevail so greatly, is, for that men suffer themselves to be deluded.

Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

Thou may'st forgive his anger, while thou makest use of the plainness of his declamation.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

DECLAMA'TOR. n. f. [Latin.] A declaimer; an orator; a rhetorician.

Who could, I say, hear this generous declamator, without being fired at his noble zeal.

Tatler, No. 56.

DECLAMATORY. adj. [declamatorius, Latin.]

1. Relating to the practice of declaiming; pertaining to declamation; treated in the manner of a rhetorician.

This a while suspended his interment, and became a declamatory theme amongst the religious men of that age.

Wotton.

2. Appealing to the passions.

He has run himself into his own declamatory way, and almost forgotten that he was now setting up for a moral poet.

Dryden.

DECOROUS. adj. [decorus, Latin.] Decent; suitable to a character; becoming; proper; befitting; seemly.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

TO DECORTICATE. v. a. [decortico, Latin.] To divest of the bark or husk; to husk; to peel; to strip.

Take great barley, dried and decorticated, after it is well washed, and boil it in water. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DECORTICATION. n. f. [from decorticate.] The act of stripping the bark or husk.

DECORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Decency; behaviour contrary to licentiousness, contrary to levity; seemliness.

If your master

Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,

That majesty, to keep decorum, must

No less beg than a kingdom. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

I am far from suspecting simplicity, which is bold to trespass in points of decorum. Wotton.

Beyond the fix'd and settled rules

Of vice and virtue in the schools,

The better sort should set before 'em

A grace, a manner, a decorum. Prior.

Gentlemen of the army should be, at least, obliged to external decorum: a profligate life and character should not be a means of advancement. Swift.

He kept with princes due decorum;

Yet never stood in awe before 'em. Swift.

TO DECOY. v. a. [from koei, Dutch, a cage.] To lure into a cage; to intrap; to draw into a snare.

A fowler had taken a patridge, who offered to decoy her companions into the snare. L'Estrange.

From the moon is the sign of feasts, a light that decreaseth in her perfection. Ecclesi. xliii. 7.

Unto fifty years the heart annually increaseth the weight of one drachm; after which, in the same proportion, it decreaseth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 20.

It is to be observed, that when the sun comes to his tropicks, days increase and decrease but a very little for a great while together. Newton's Opt.

TO DECREASE. v. a. To make less; to diminish.

He did dishonourable find

Those articles, which did our state decrease. Daniel's C. War.

Nor cherish'd they relations poor,

That might decrease their present store. Prior.

Heat increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids, as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newt.

DECREASE. n. f. [from the verb.] The state of growing less; decay.

By weak'ning toil, and hoary age o'ercome,

See thy decrease, and hasten to thy tomb. Prior.

2. The wain; the time when the visible face of the moon grows less.

See in what time the seeds, set in the increase of the moon, come to a certain height, and how they differ from those that are set in the decrease of the moon. Bacon's Natural History.

TO DECRETE. v. n. [decretum, Latin.] To make an edict; to appoint by edict; to establish by law; to determine; to resolve.

They shall see the end of the wife, and shall not understand what God in his counsel hath decreed of him. Wisd. iv.

Father eternal! Thine is to decree;

Mine, both in heav'n and earth, to do thy will. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 68.

Had heav'n decreed that I should life enjoy,

Heav'n had decreed to save unhappy Troy. Dryden's Æn.

TO DECRETE. v. a. To doom or assign by a decree.

Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established. Job.

The king their father,

On just and weighty reasons, has decreed

His sceptre to the younger. Rowe's Ambitious Step-mother.

DECRETE. n. f. [decretum, Latin.]

1. An edict; a law.

If you deny me, fie upon your law!

There is no force in the decrees of Venice. Shakespeare.

There went a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. Luke ii. 1.

Are

Are we condemn'd by fate's unjust decree,
No more our houses and our homes to see? Dryden's Virg.
The Supreme Being is sovereignly good; he rewards the just, and punishes the unjust: and the folly of man, and not the decree of heaven, is the cause of human calamity. Broome.

2. An established rule.
When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder. Job xxviii. 26.

3. A determination of a suit, or litigated cause.

4. [In canon law.] An ordinance, which is enacted by the pope himself, by and with the advice of his cardinals in council assembled, without being consulted by any one thereon.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

DECREMENT. n. f. [decrementum, Latin.] Decrease; the state of growing less; the quantity lost by decreasing.
Upon the tropick, and first descension from our solstice, we are scarce sensible of declination; but declining farther, our decrement accelerates: we set apace, and in our last days precipitate into our graves. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Rocks, mountains, and the other elevations of the earth, suffer a continual decrement, and grow lower and lower. Woodw.

DECREPIT. adj. [decrepitus, Latin.] Wasted and worn out with age; in the last stage of decay.
Decrepit miser! base, ignoble wretch! Shakesp. H. VI.
These years were short of many mens lives in this decrepit age of the world, wherein many exceed fourscore, and some an hundred years. Raleigh's History of the World.
This pope is decrepit, and the bell goeth for him: take order that there be chosen a pope of fresh year. Bacon's H. War.
Decrepit superstition, and such as had their nativity in times beyond all history, are fresh in the observation of many heads. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
And from the North to call
Decrepit Winter. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 655.
Who this observes, may in his body find
Decrepit age, but never in his mind. Denham.
Propp'd on his staff, and stooping as he goes,
A painted mitre shades his furrow'd brows;
The god, in the decrepit form array'd,
The gardens enter'd, and the fruits survey'd. Pope.
The charge of witchcraft inspires people with a malevolence towards those poor decrepit parts of our species, in whom human nature is defaced by infirmity and dotage. Addis.

TO DECREPITATE. v. a. [decrepo, Latin.] To calcine salt till it has ceased to crackle in the fire.
So will it come to pass in a pot of salt, although decrepitated.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

DECREPITATION. n. f. [from decrepitare.] The crackling noise which salt makes, when put over the fire in a cru-cible. Quincy.

DECREPITNESS. n. f. [from decrepit.] The last stage of decrepitude. n. f. [decrepitude, Latin.] The last effects of old age.
Mother earth, in this her barrenness and decrepitness of age, can procreate such swarms of curious engines. Eentley's Serm.

DECRESCENT. adj. [from decrescens, Latin.] Growing less;
being in a state of decrease.

DECRETAL. adj. [decretum, Latin.] Appertaining to a decree; containing a decree.
A decretal epistle is that which the pope decrees either by himself, or else by the advice of his cardinals; and this must be on his being consulted by some particular person or persons thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DECRETAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A book of decrees or edicts; a body of laws.
The second room, whose walls
Were painted fair with memorable gests,
Of magistrates, of courts, of tribunals,
Of commonwealths, of states, of policy,
Of law, of judgments, and of decretals. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. The collection of the pope's decrees.
Traditions and decretals were made of equal force, and as authentic as the sacred charter itself. Howel's Vqcal Forrest.

DECRETIST. n. f. [from decretum.] One that studies or professes the knowledge of the decretal.
The decretists had their rise and beginning under the reign of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DECRETORY. adj. [from decretum.]
1. Judicial; definitive.
There are lenitives that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence.
South's Sermons.

2. Critical; in which there is some definitive event.
The motions of the moon, supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decretory days, depend on that number. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

DECRYAL. n. f. [from decry.] Clamorous censure; hasty or noisy condemnation; concurrence in censuring any thing.

TO DECRY. v. a. [dercrier, French.] To censure; to blame clamorously; to clamour against.
Malice in criticks reigns so high.
That for small errors they whole plays decry. Dryden.

Those measures which are extolled by one half of the kingdom, are naturally decry'd by the other. Addison's Freeb.
They applied themselves to lessen their authority, decry'd them as hard and unnecessary restraints. Rogers, Serm. 17.
Quacks and impostors are still cautioning us to beware of counterfeits, and decry others cheats only to make more way for their own. Swift.

DECU'MBENCE. n. f. [decumbo, Latin.] The act of lying down; the posture of lying down.
This must come to pass, if we hold opinion they lie not down, and enjoy no decumbence at all; for station is properly no rest, but one kind of motion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
Not considering the ancient manner of decumbency, he imputed this gesture of the beloved disciple unto rusticity, or an act of incivility. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 6.

DECU'MBITURE. n. f. [from decumbo, Latin.]
1. The time at which a man takes to his bed in a disease.
2. [In astrology.] A scheme of the heavens erected for that time, by which the prognosticks of recovery or death are discovered.
If but a mile she travel out of town,
The planetary hour must first be known,
And lucky moment: if her eye but akes,
Or itches, its decumbiture she takes. Dryden's Juv. Sat. vi.

DE'CU'PLE. adj. [decuplus, Latin.] Tenfold; the same number ten times repeated.
Man's length, that is, a perpendicular from the vertex unto the sole of the foot, is decuple unto his profundity; that is, a direct line between the breast and the spine. Brown's Vul. Err.
Supposing there be a thousand sorts of insects in this island, if the same proportion holds between the insects of England and of the rest of the world, as between plants domestick and exotick, that is, near a decuple, the species of insects wil-amount to ten thousand. Ray on the Creation.

DECU'RION. n. f. [decurio, Lat.] A commander over ten; an officer subordinate to the centurion.
He instituted decurions through both these colonies, that is, one over every ten families. Temple.

DECU'RSION. n. f. [decurfus, Lat.] The act of running down.
What is decayed by that decursion of waters, is supplied by the terrene sœces which water brings. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

DECURTA'TION. n. f. [decurtatio, Latin.] The act of cutting short, or shortening.

TO DECU'SSATE. v. a. [decusso, Latin.] To intersect at acute angles.
This it performs by the action of a notable muscle on each side, of a great length, having the form of the letter X, made up of many fibres, decussating one another longways. Ray.

DECUSSA'TION. n. f. [from decussate.] The act of crossing;
state of being crossed at unequal angles.
Though there be decussation of the rays in the pupil of the eye, and so the image of the object in the retina, or bottom of the eye, be inverted; yet doth not the object appear inverted, but in its right or natural posture. Ray on the Creation.

TO DEDE'CORATE. v. a. [dedecoro, Latin.] To disgrace; to bring a reproach upon. Diſt.

DEDECORA'TION. n. f. [from dedecorate.] The act of dis-gracing; disgrace. Diſt.

DEDE'COROUS. adj. [dedecus, Lat.] Disgraceful; reproachful; shameful. Diſt.

DEDENTI'TION. n. f. [de and dentitio, Lat.] Loss or shedding of the teeth.
Solon divided it into ten septenaries, because in every one thereof a man received some sensible mutation: in the first is dedentition, or falling of teeth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

TO DEDICATE. v. a. [dedico, Latin.]
1. To devote to some divine power; to consecrate and set apart to sacred uses.
A pleasant grove
Was shot up high, full of the stately tree
That dedicated is to olympick Jove,
And to his son Alcides, when as he Gain'd in Nemea goodly victory. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.
The princes offered for dedicating the altar, in the day that it was anointed. Num. vii. 10.
Warn'd by the fear, to her offended name
We rais'd, and dedicate this wond'rous frame. Dryden's Æn.

2. To appropriate solemnly to any person or purpose.
There cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Ladies, a gen'ral welcome from his grace
Salutes you all: this night he dedicates
To fair content and you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
He went to learn the profession of a soldier, to which he had dedicated himself. Clarendon.
Bid her instant wed,
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.

3. To inscribe to a patron.
He compiled ten elegant books, and dedicated them to the lord Burghley. Peacham on Poetry.

DE'DICATE. adj. [from the verb.] Consecrate; devote; dedicated; appropriate.

Prayers from preserved souls,

From fasting maids, whose names are dedicate

To nothing temporal. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

This tenth part, or tithe, being thus assigned unto him, leaveth now to be of the nature of the other nine parts, which are given us for our worldly necessities, and becometh as a thing dedicate and appropriate unto God. Spelman.

DEDICA'TION. n. f. [d. dicatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dedicating to any being or purpose; consecration; solemn appropriation.

It cannot be laid to many mens charge, that they have been so curious as to trouble bishops with placing the first stone in the churches; or so scrupulous as, after the erection of them, to make any great ado for their dedication. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.

Among publick solemnities there is none so glorious as that under the reign of king Solomon, at the dedication of the temple. Addison's Freeholder, N. 49.

2. A servile address to a patron.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,

Sat full blown Bufo, puff'd by ev'ry quill;

Fed by soft dedication all day long,

Horace and he went hand in hand in song. Pope, Epist. xi.

DEDICA'TOR. n. f. [from dedicate.] One who inscribes his work to a patron with compliment and servility.

Leave dang'rous truths to unsuccessful satyrs,

And flattery to fulsome dedicators. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

DE'DICATORY. adj. [from dedicate.] Composing a dedication; complimentary; adulatory.

Thus I should begin my epistle, if it were a dedicatory one; but it is a friendly letter. Pope.

DEDI'TION. n. f. [deditio, Latin.] The act of yielding up any thing; surrendry.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations agreed between the conqueror and the conquered. Hale's History of the Common Law.

To DEDUCE. v. a. [deduco, Latin.]

1. To draw in a regular connected series, from one time or one event to another.

O goddess, say, shall I deduce my rhimes

From the dire nation in its early times! Pope.

2. To form a regular chain of consequential prepositions.

Reason is nothing but the faculty of deducing unknown truths from principles already known. Locke.

3. To lay down in regular order, so as that the following shall naturally rise from the foregoing.

Lend me your song, ye nightingales! Oh pour

The mazy-running soul of melody

Into my varied verse! while I deduce,

From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,

The symphony of Spring. Thomson's Spring, l. 575.

DEDUCEMENT. n. f. [from deduce.] The thing deduced; the collection of reason; consequential preposition.

Praise and prayer are his due worship, and the rest of those deducements, which I am confident are the remote effects of revelation. Dryden's Pref. to Rel. Laici.

DEDUCIBLE. adj. [from deduce.] Collectible by reason; consequential; discoverable from principles laid down.

The condition, although deducible from many grounds, yet shall we evidence it but from few. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

The general character of the new earth is paradisaical, and the particular character that it hath no sea; and both are apparently deducible from its formation. Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.

So far, therefore, as conscience reports any thing agreeable to, or deducible from these, it is to be hearkened to. South.

All properties of a triangle depend on, and are deducible from, the complex idea of three lines, including a space. Locke.

DEDUCIVE. adj. [from deduce.] Performing the act of deduction. Dict.

To DEDUCT. v. a. [deduco, Latin.]

1. To subtract; to take away; to cut off; to defalcate.

We deduct from the computation of our years, that part of our time which is spent in incogitancy of infancy. Norris.

2. To separate; to dispart; to divide. Now not in use.

Having yet, in his deducted spright,

Some sparks remaining of that heavenly fire. Spenser.

DEDUCTION. n. f. [deductio, Lat.] Consequential collection; consequence; preposition drawn from principles premised.

Out of scripture such duties may be deduced, by some kind of consequence, as by long circuit of deduction it may be that even all truth, out of any truth, may be concluded. Hooker.

Set before you the moral law of God, with such deductions from it as our Saviour hath drawn, or our own reason, well informed, can make. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

That by diversity of motions we should spell out things not resembled by them, we must attribute to some secret deduction; but what this deduction should be, or by what mediums this knowledge is advanced, is as dark as ignorance. Glanv. Sceps.

You have laid the experiments together in such a way, and made such deductions from them, as I have not hitherto met with. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

All cross and distasteful humours are either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tillotson, Sermon 5.

A reflection so obvious, that natural instinct seems to have suggested it even to those who never much attended to deductions of reason. Rogers, Sermon 19.

2. That which is deducted; defalcation.

Bring then these blessings to a strict account;

Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope's Essays.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduct.] Deducible; that which is or may be deducted from a position premised.

DEDUCTIVELY. adv. [from deductive.] Consequentially; by regular deduction; by a regular train of ratiocination.

There is scarce a popular error passant in our days, which is not either directly expressed, or deductively contained in this work. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 8.

DEED. n. f. [dæd, Saxon; daed, Dutch.]

1. Action, whether good or bad; thing done.

From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,

The place is dignified by th' doer's deed. Shakespeare.

The monster nought reply'd; for words were vain,

And deeds could only deeds unjust maintain. Dryden.

The same had not consented to the counsel and deed. Luke.

We are not secluded from the expectation of reward for our charitable deeds. Smalbridge's Sermons.

2. Exploit; performance.

I, on the other side,

Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds;

The deeds themselves, though mute, spoke loud the doer. Milt.

Thousands were there in darker fame that dwelt,

Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

3. Power of action; agency.

Nor knew I not

To be with will and deed created free. Milt. Paradise Lost.

4. Act declaratory of an opinion.

They desire, with strange absurdity, that to the same senate it should belong to give full judgment in matter of excommunication, and to absolve whom it pleased them, clean contrary to their own former deeds and oaths. Hooker's Preface.

5. Written evidence of any legal act.

The solicitor gave an evidence for a deed, which was impeached to be fraudulent. Bacon.

He builds his house upon the sand, and writes the deeds, by which he holds his estate, upon the face of a river. South.

6. Fact; reality; the contrary to fiction: whence the word indeed.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen

The stage arise, and the big clouds descend;

So now in very deed I might behold

The pond'rous earth, and all yon marble roof,

Meet like the hands of Jove. Lee's Oedipus.

DEE'DLESS. adj. [from deed.] Unactive; without action; without exploits.

Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue. Shakespeare.

Instantly, he cry'd, your female discord end,

Ye deedless boasters! and the song attend. Pope's Odyssey.

To DEEM. v. n. part. dempt, or deemed. [dengan, Gothick; doemen, Dutch; ðeman, Saxon.] To judge; to conclude upon consideration; to think; to opine; to determine.

Here eke that famous golden apple grew,

For which th' Idean ladies disagreed,

'Till partial Paris dempt it Venus' due. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Do me not dy,

Ne deem thy force by fortune's doom unjust,

That hath, maugre her spite, thus low me laid in dust. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5. stanza 12.

But they that skill not of so heavenly matter,

All that they know not, envy or admire,

Rather than envy, let them wonder at her,

But not to deem of her desert aspire. Spenser, Sonnet 84.

So natural is the union of religion with justice, that we may boldly deem there is neither, where both are not. Hooker.

He, who to be deem'd

A god, leap'd fondly into Ætna flames. Milt. Parad. Lost.

These blessings, friend, a deity bestow'd;

For never can I deem him less than god. Dryd. Virg. Past.

Nature disturb'd,

Is deem'd vindictive to have chang'd her course. Thomson.

DEEM. n. f. [from the verb.] Judgment; surmise; opinion. Not now in use.

Hear me, my love, be thou but true of heart.

—I true! how now? what wicked deem is this? Shakespeare.

DEE'MSTER. n. f. [from deem.] A judge: a word yet in use in Jersey and the Isle of Man.

DEEP. adj. [deep, Saxon.]

1. Having length downwards; descending far; profound.

All trees in high and sandy grounds are to be set deep, and in watery grounds more shallow. Bacon's Natural History.

The gaping gulph low to the centre lies,

And twice as deep as earth is distant from the skies. Dryden.

2. Low in situation; not high.

3. Measured from the surface downward.

Mr. Halley, in diving deep into the sea in a diving vessel, found, found, in a clear sun-shine day, that when he was sunk many fathoms deep into the water, the upper part of his hand, on which the sun shone directly, appeared of a red colour. Newt.

4. Entering far; piercing a great way.

This avarice

Strikes deeper; grows with more pernicious root. Sh. Macb.
For, even in that season of the year, the ways in that vale were very deep. Clarendon, b. viii.

Thou hast not strength such labours to sustain:

Drink hellebore, my boy! drink deep, and scour thy brain. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

5. Far from the outer part.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,

Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

6. Not superficial; not obvious.

If the matter be knotty, and the sense lies deep, the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and close contemplation. Locke.

7. Sagacious; penetrating; having the power to enter far into a subject.

Who hath not heard it spoken,

How deep you were within the books of heav'n! Shakespeare.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

He's meditating with two deep divines. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

He in my ear

Vented much policy and projects deep

Of enemies, of aids, battles and leagues,

Plausible to the world, to me worth naught. Milt. Par. Reg.

I do not discover the helps which this great man of deep thought mentions. Locke.

8. Full of contrivance; politick; insidious.

When I have most need to employ a friend,

Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,

Be he to me.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

9. Grave; solemn.

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,

But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,

Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

Nor awful Phœbus was on Pindus heard

With deeper silence, or with more regard. Dryden's Silenius.

10. Dark coloured.

With deeper brown the grove was overspread. Dryd. Fab.

Attracts the hapless youth through storms and waves,

Alone in deep of night. Philips.

To DE'EPEN. v. a. [from deep.]

1. To make deep; to sink far below the surface.

The city of Rome would receive a great advantage from the undertaking, as it would raise the banks and deepen the bed of the Tiber. Addison's Travels.

2. To darken; to cloud; to make dark.

You must deepen your colours so, that the orpiment may be the highest. Peacham on Drawing.

3. To make sad or gloomy. See DEEP. adj.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,

Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green,

Deepens the murmurs of the falling floods,

And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

DEEP-MOUTHED. adj. [deep and mouth.] Having a hoarse and loud voice.

Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;

And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakespeare.

Behold the English beach

Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,

Whose shouts and claps outvoice that deep-mouth'd sea. Shak.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,

And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround. Dryden.

Hills, dales, and forests far behind remain,

While the warm scent draws on the deep-mouth'd train. Gay.

DEEP-MU'SING. adj. [deep and  muse.] Contemplative; lost in thought.

But he deep-musing o'er the mountains stray'd,

D E F

Through mazy thickets of the woodland shade. Pope's Odyss.

DE'EP'LY. adj. [from deep.]

1. To a great depth; far below the surface.

Fear is a passion that is most deeply rooted in our natures, and flows immediately from the principle of self-preservation. Tillotson, Sermon. 1.

Those impressions were made when the brain was more susceptible of them: they have been deeply engraven at the proper season, and therefore they remain. Watts's Improvement.

2. With great study or sagacity; not superficially; not carelessly; profoundly.

3. Sorrowfully; solemnly; with a great degree of seriousness or sadness.

DEFIANCE. n. f. [from deffi, French.]

1. A challenge; an invitation to fight.

The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears,
He swung about his head. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Nor is it just to bring

A war, without a just defiance made. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

2. A challenge to make any impeachment good.

3. Expression of abhorrence or contempt.

The Novatian heresy was very apt to attract well meaning souls, who, seeing it bad such express defiance to apostacy, could not suspect that it was itself any defection from the faith. Decay of Piety.

No body will so openly bid defiance to common sense, as to affirm visible and direct contradictions. Locke.

DEFICIENCE. } n. f. [from deficio, Latin.] Defect; fail-

DEFICIENCY. } ing; imperfection.

Scaliger, finding a defect in the reason of Aristotle, introduceth one of no less deficiency himself. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Thou in thyself art perfect, and in thee

Is no deficiency found. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 415.

We shall find, in our own natures, too great evidence of intellectual deficiency, and deplorable confessions of human ignorance. Glanv. Sceps. c. 3.

What great deficiency is it, if we come short of others? Sprat's Sermons.

The characters of comedy and tragedy are never to be made perfect, but always to be drawn with some specks of frailty and deficiency, such as they have been described to us in history. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

2. Want; something less than is necessary.

What is to be considered in this case, is chiefly, if there be a sufficient fulness or deficiency of blood, for different methods are to be taken. Arbuthnot on Diet.

There is no burden laid upon our posterity, nor any deficiency to be hereafter made up by ourselves, which has been our case in so many other subsidies. Addison's Freeholder.

DEFICIENT. adj. [deficiens, from deficio, Latin.] Failing; wanting; defective; imperfect.

O woman! best are all things as the will

Of God ordain'd them: his creating hand

Nothing imperfect or deficient left. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Figures are either simple or mixed: the simple be either circular or angular; and of circular, either complete, as circles, or deficient, as ovals. Wotton's Architect.

Neither Virgil nor Homer were deficient in any of the former beauties. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

Several views, postures, stands, turns, limitations and exceptions, and several other thoughts of the mind, for which we have either none, or very deficient names, are diligently to be studied. Locke.

DEFICIENT Verbs. See DEFECTIVE Verbs.

DEFILER. n. f. [from defile.] One that defiles; a corrupter; a violater.

At the last tremendous day I shall hold forth in my arms my much wronged child, and call aloud for vengeance on her defiler. Addison's Guardian, N°. 128.

DEFINABLE. adj. [from define.]

1. That which may be defined; capable of definition.

The Supreme Nature we cannot otherwise define, than by saying it is infinite, as if infinite were definable, or infinity a subject for our narrow understanding. Dryden.

2. That which may be ascertained.

Concerning the time of the end of the world, the question is, whether that time be definable or no. Burnet's Theory.

To DEFINE. v. a. [definio, Lat. definir, French.]

1. To give the definition; to explain a thing by its qualities and circumstances.

Whose loss can'st thou mean,

That do'st so well their miseries define? Sidney, b. ii.

Though defining be thought the proper way to make known the proper signification, yet there are some words that will not be defined. Locke.

2. To circumscribe; to mark the limit; to bound.

When the rings, or some parts of them, appeared only black and white, they were very distinct and well defined, and the blackness seemed as intense as that of the central spot. Newt.

To DEFINE. v. n. To determine; to decide; to decree.

The unjust judge is the capital remover of landmarks, when he defineth amiss of lands and properties. Bacon, Ess. 57.

DEFINER. n. f. [from define.] One that explains; one that describes a thing by its qualities.

Your God, forsooth, is found

Incomprehensible and infinite;

But is he therefore found? Vain searcher! no:

Let your imperfect definition show,

That nothing you, the weak definer, know. Prior.

DEFINITE. adj. [from definitus, Latin.]

1. Certain; limited; bounded.

Hither to your harbour divers times he repaired, and here, by your means, had the sight of the goddess, who in a definite compass can set forth infinite beauty. Sidney, b. i.

2. Exact; precise.

Idiots, in this case of favour, would Be wisely definite. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth, in the accusatory libel or inquisition, which succeeds in the place of accusation, some certain and definite time. Ayliffe's Parerg.

DEFINITE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Thing explained or defined.

If these things are well considered, special bastardy is nothing else but the definition of the general; and the general, again, is nothing else but a definite of the special. Ayliffe.

DEFINITENESS. n. f. [from definite.] Certainty; limitedness. Dist.

DEFINITION. n. f. [definitio, Latin; definition, French.]

1. A short description of a thing by its properties.

I drew my definition of poetical wit from my particular consideration of him; for propriety of thoughts and words are only to be found in him; and, where they are proper, they will be delightful. Dryden.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logick.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and difference.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal merely; for that is not an adequate and distinguishing definition. Bentley's Sermon.

DEFINITIVE. adj. [definitivus, Latin.] Determinate; positive; express.

Other authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict and definitive truth. Brown's Vulg. Err.

I make haste to the casting and comparing of the whole work, being indeed the very definitive sum of this art, to distribute usefully and gracefully a well chosen plot. Wotton.

DEFINITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.] Positively; decisively; expressly.

Definitively thus I answer you:

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert,

Unmeritable, shuns your high request. Shakef. Rich. III.

That

That Metheusalah was the longest lived, of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

Bellarmino faith, because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold, that the same body may be circumscriptively and definitively in more places at once. Hall.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. f. [from definitive.] Decisiveness. Diët.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. f. [from deflagro, Latin.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have been forced to spend much more time than the opinion of the ready deflagrability, if I may so speak, of saltpetre did beforehand permit us to imagine. Boyle on Saltpetre.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Lat.] Having the quality of waisting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

DEFLAGRATION. n. f. [from deflagratio, Latin.]

A term frequently made use of in chymistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation; as in making Æthiops with fire, with sal prunella, and many others. Quincy.

The true reason, therefore, why that paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it, seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist; and sometimes we have found it so moist, that the flame of a candle would not readily light it. Boyle.

TO DEFLECT. v. n. [from deflecto, Latin.] To turn aside; to deviate from a true course, or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflecteth not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the Equator, the North point of the needle wheeleth to the West. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Arising beyond the Equator, it maketh northward almost fifteen degrees; and deflecting after westward, without meanders, continueth a strait course about forty degrees. Brown.

For did not some from a strait course deflect, They could not meet, they could no world erect. Blackm.

DEFLECTION. n. f. [from deflecto, Latin.]

1. Deviation; the act of turning aside.

Needles incline to the South on the other side of the Equator; and, at the very line or middle circle, stand without deflection. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. 2. c. 2.

2. A turning aside, or out of the way.

3. [In navigation.] The departure of a ship from its true course.

DEFLEXURE. n. f. [from deflecto, Latin.] A bending down; a turning aside, or out of the way. Diët.

DEFLORATION. n. f. [from defloratio, Fr. from defloratus, Lat.]

1. The act of deflouring; the taking away of a woman's virginity.

2. A selection of that which is most valuable.

The laws of Normandy are, in a great measure, the defloration of the English laws, and a transcript of them. Hale.

TO DEFLOUR. v. a. [from deflorer, French.]

1. To ravish; to take away a woman's virginity.

As is the lust of an eunuch to deflour a virgin, so is he that executeth judgment with violence. Ecclef. xx. 4.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor, And let my spleenful sons this trull deflour. Shakesf. Tit. And.

2. To take away the beauty and grace of any thing.

How on a sudden lost, Defac'd, deflour'd, and now to death devote! Milt. Pa. Left.

If he died young, he died innocent, and before the sweetness of his soul was defloured and ravished from him, by the flames and follies of a froward age. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

DEFLOURER. n. f. [from deflour.] A ravisher; one that takes away virginity.

I have often wondered, that those deflourers of innocence, though dead to all the sentiments of virtue and honour, are not restrained by humanity. Addison's Guardian.

DEFLUOUS. adj. [from defluus, Latin.]

1. That flows down.

2. That falls off.

DEFLUXION. n. f. [from defluxio, Latin.] A defluxion; a flowing down of humours.

We see that taking cold moveth looseness, by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so doth cold likewise cause rheums and defluxions from the head. Bacon's Natural History.

DEFLY. adv. [from dest.] Dexterously; skilfully. Obsolete. Properly destly.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foot

To the instrument;

They dauncen destly, and singen foote,

In their merriment. Spenser's Pastorals.

DEFOEDATION. n. f. [from defœdus, Lat.] The act of making filthy; pollution.

What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instinced through the whole, which the defœdation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth. Bentley's Preface to Milton.

DEFORCEMENT. n. f. [from force.] A withholding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner.

TO DEFORM. v. a. [from deformo, Latin.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up. Sh. R. III.
Wintry blasts

Deform the year delightful. Thomson's Winter.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair. Dryd. Fab.

DEFORM. adj. [from deformis, Latin.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim,

That who so kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dame. Fairy Queen.

So spake the grievly terror; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Sight so deform, what heart of rock could long
Dry-ey'd behold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 494.

DEFORMATION. n. f. [from deformatio, Latin.] A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEFORMEDLY. adv. [from deform.] In an ugly manner.

DEFORMEDNESS. n. f. [from deformed.] Ugliness; a disagreeable form.

DEFORMITY. n. f. [from deformitas, Latin.]

1. Ugliness; ill-favouredness.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Where sits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size;
To disproportion me in every part. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.
Why should not man,
Retaining still divine similitude

In part, from such deformities be free,
And, for his maker's image sake, exempt? Milt. Pa. Left.

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity. Dryd. Pref. Dufres.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.

No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming. King Charles.

4. Dishonour; disgrace.

DEFORSOR. n. f. [from forceur, French.] One that overcomes and casteth out by force. A law term. Blount.

TO DEFRAUD. v. a. [from defraudo, Latin.] To rob or deprive by a wile or trick; to cheat; to cozen; to deceive; to beguile. With of before the thing taken by fraud.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. 2 bes. iv. 6.

My son, defraud not the poor of his living, and make not the needy eyes to wait long. Ecclef. iv. 1.

They seem, after a sort, even to mourn, as being injured and defrauded of their right, when places, not sanctified as they are, prevent them unnecessarily in that pre-eminence and honour. Hosker, b. v. f. 16.

Then they, who brothers better claim disown,
Expel their parents, and usurp the throne;
Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden's Æn. 6.

But now he seiz'd Briseis' heav'nly charms,
And of my valour's prize defrauds my arms. Pope's Iliad.

There is a portion of our lives which every wise man may justly reserve for his own particular use, without defrauding his native country. Dryden's Dedicat. to King Arthur.

DEFRAUDER. n. f. [from defraud.] A deceiver; one that cheats.

The profligate in morals grow severe,
Defrauders just, and sycophants sincere. Blackm. Creation.

TO DEFRA'Y. v. a. [from defrayer, French.] To bear the charges of; to discharge expences.

He would, out of his own revenue, defray the charges belonging to the sacrifices. 2 Mac. ix. 16.

It is easy, Ireneus, to lay a charge upon any town; but to foresee how the same may be answered and defrayed, is the chief part of good advisement. Spenser's State of Ireland.

It

D E G

It is long since any stranger arrived in this part, and therefore take ye no care; the state will defray you all the time you stay; neither shall you stay one day the less for that. Bacon.
DEFRA'YER. n. f. [from defray.] One that discharges expences.

DEFRA'YMENT. n. f. [from defray.] The payment of expences.

DEFT. adj. [dæft, Saxon.] Obsolete.

1. Neat; handsome; spruce.

You go not the way to examine: you must call the watch that are their accusers.— —Yea, marry, that's the deftest way. Shak. Much ado about N.

3. Ready; dexterous.

Loud fits of laughter seiz'd the guests, to see

The limping god so deft at his new ministry. Dryd. Iliad.

The wanton calf may skip with many a bound,

And my cur, Tray, play deftest feats around. Gay's Past.

DE'FTLY. adv. [from deft.] Obsolete.

1. Neatly; dexterously.

2. In a skilful manner.

Come, high or low,

Thyself and office deftly show. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Young Colin Clout, a lad of peerly meed,

Full well could dance, and deftly tune the reed. Gay's Past.

DEFUN'CT. adj. [defunctus, Latin.]

1. Dead; deceased.

I therefore beg it not,

To please the palate of my appetite;

Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,

In me defunct, and proper satisfaction. Shakesp. Othello.

Here entity and quiddity,

The souls of defunct bodies fly. Hudibras.

DEFUN'CT. n. f. [from the adjective.] One that is deceased; a dead man, or woman.

Nature doth abhor to make his couch

With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

In many of these cases the searchers are able to report the opinion of the physician who was with the patient, as they receive the same from the friends of the defunct. Graunt.

DEFUN'CTION. n. f. [from defunct.] Death.

Nor did the French possess the Salique land,

Until four hundred one and twenty years

After defunction of king Pharamond. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

TO DEFY'. v. a. [deffier, Fr. from de fide decedere, or some like phrase, to fall from allegiance to rebellion, contempt, or insult.]

1. To call to combat; to challenge.

I once again

Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight. Milton's Agonistes.

Where seek retreat, now innocence is fled!

Safe in that guard, I durst even hell defy;

Without it, tremble now, when heav'n is nigh. Dryden.

Agis, the Lycian, stepping forth with pride,

To single fight the boldest foe defy'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. To treat with contempt; to slight.

I do know

As many fools that stand in better place,

Garnish'd like him, that for a tricky word

Defy the matter. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

DEFY'. n. f. [from the verb.] A challenge; an invitation to fight.

At this the challenger, with fierce defy,

His trumpet sounds; the challeng'd makes reply:

With clangour rings the field, resounds the vaulted sky. Dryd.

DEFY'ER. n. f. [from defy.] A challenger; one that invites to fight.

God may, some time or other, think it the concern of his justice, and providence too, to revenge the affronts put upon them by such impudent defyers of both, as neither believe a God, nor ought to be believed by man. South's Sermons.

DEGENERACY. n. f. [from degeneratio, Latin.]

1. A departing from the virtue of our ancestors.

2. A forsaking of that which is good.

'Tis true, we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness; but that grace, which the gospel offers to us for our assistance, is sufficient for us. Tillotson, Sermon 6.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners, and contempt of religion, which is entirely our case at present. Swift.

3. Meanness.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery. Addison.

TO DEGENERATE. v. n. [degenerare, Lat. degenerer, Fr. degenerar, Spanish.]

1. To fall from the virtue of ancestors.

2. To fall from a more noble to a base state.

When wit transgresseth decency, it degenerates into insolence and impiety. Tillotson, Sermon 2.

Most of those fruits that use to be grafted, if they be set of kernels or stones, degenerate. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 519.

D E G

DEGENERATE. adv. [from the verb.]

1. Unlike his ancestors; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

Thou art like enough

To fight against me under Piercy's pay;

To dog his heels, and curt'fy at his frowns,

To show how much thou art degenerate. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Yet thou hast greater cause to be

Asham'd of them, than they of thee;

Degenerate from their ancient brood,

Since first the court allow'd them food. Swift.

2. Unworthy; base.

So all shall turn degen'rate, all deprav'd;

Justice and temperance, truth, and faith forgot!

One man except. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 806.

When a man so far becomes degenerate as to quit the principles of human nature, and to be a noxious creature, there is commonly an injury done some person or other. Locke.

DEGENERATENESS. n. f. [from degenerate.] Degeneracy; a being grown wild; out of kind. Dict.

DEGENERATION. n. f. [from degenerate.]

1. A deviation from the virtue of one's ancestors.

2. A falling from a more excellent state to one of less worth.

3. The thing changed from its primitive state.

In plants, wherein there is no distinction of sexes, these transplantations are yet more obvious than they; as that of barley into oats, of wheat into darnell; and those grains which generally arise among corn, as cockle, aracus, cegilops, and other degenerations. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

DEGENEROUS. adj. [from degener, Latin.]

1. Degenerated; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

2. Vile; base; infamous; unworthy.

Let not the tumultuary violence of some mens immoderate demands ever betray me to that degenerous and unmanly flattery, which should make me strengthen them by my consent. King Charles.

Shame, instead of piety, restrains them from many base and degenerous practices. South's Sermons.

Degenerous passion, and for man too base,

It seats its empire in the female race;

There rages, and, to make his blow secure,

Puts flattery on, until the aim be sure. Dryden's Juvenal.

*DEGENEROUSLY. adv. [from degenerous.] In a degenerate manner; basely; meanly.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see our greatest heroes, like Hercules at the distaff, thus degenerously employed?

Decay of Piety.

He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryden.

But is no rank, no station, no degree,

From this contagious taint of sorrow free? Prior.

2. The state and condition in which a thing is.

The book of wisdom noteth degrees of idolatry, making that of worshipping petty and vile idols more gross than simply the worshipping of the creature. Bacon's Holy War.

3. A step or preparation to any thing.

Her first degree was by setting forth her beauties, truly in nature not to be disliked, but as much advanced to the eye as abased to the judgment by art. Sidney, b. ii.

Which fight the knowledge of myself might bring,

Which to true wisdom is the first degree. Davies.

4. Order of lineage; descent of family.

King Latinus, in the third degree,

Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden's Æn. b. vii. l. 72.

5. The orders or classes of the angels.

The several degrees of angels may probably have larger views, and be endowed with capacities able to set before them, as in one picture, all their past knowledge at once. Locke.

6. Measure; proportion.

If you come to separate them, and that all the parts are equally heard as loud as one another, they will stun you to that degree, that you would fancy your ears were torn in pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Poesy

Admits of no degrees; but must be still

Sublimely good, or despicably ill. Roscommon.

7. [In geometry.] The three hundred and sixtieth part of the circumference of a circle. The space of one degree in the heavens is accounted to answer to sixty miles.

In minds and manners, twins oppos'd we see;

In the same sign, almost the same degree. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

To you who live in chill degree,

As map informs, of fifty-three. Dryden's Epistles.

8. [In arithmetick] A degree consists of three figures, viz. of the hot or cold quality of a plant, mineral, or other mixt body.

The second, third, and fourth degrees of heat are more easily introduced than the first: every one is both a preparative and a step to the next. South's Sermons.

By DEGREES. adv. Gradually; by little and little.

Their bodies are exercised in all abilities both of doing and suffering, and their minds acquainted by degrees with danger.

Sidney, b. ii.

Doth not this ethereal medium, in passing out of water, glass, crystal, and other compact and dense bodies, into empty spaces, grow denser and denser by degrees? Newton's Opt.

Exulting in triumph, now swell the bold notes;

In broken air, trembling, the wild musick floats;

'Till by degrees remote and small,

The strains decay,

And melt away,

In a dying, dying fall. Pope's Cecilia.

A person who is addicted to play or gaming, though he took but little delight in it at first, by degrees contracts a strong inclination towards it. Speculator, N<sup>o</sup>. 447.

DEGUSTA'TION. n. f. [degustatio, Latin.] A tasting. Dict.

TO DEHORT. v. a. [debortor, Latin.] To dissuade; to advise to the contrary.

One of the greatest sticklers for this fond opinion, severely deborted all his followers from prostituting mathematical principles unto common apprehension or practice. Wilkins.

The author of this epistle, and the rest of the apostles, do every where vehemently and earnestly debort us from unbelief:
did they never read these dehortations? Ward on Infidelity.

DEHORTA'TION. n. f. [from debortor, Latin.] Dissuasion; a counselling to the contrary.

The author of this epistle, and the rest of the apostles, do the contrary.

DEICIDE. n. f. [from deus and cedo, Latin.] The murder of God; the act of killing God. It is only used in speaking of the death of our blessed Saviour.

Explain how perfection suffer'd pain,

Almighty languish'd, and Eternal dy'd;

How by her patient victor death was slain;

And earth profan'd, yet blest'd with deicide!

Prior.

TO DEJECT. v. a. [dejicio, Latin.]

1. To cast down; to afflict; to grieve; to depress; to sink; to discourage, to crush.

Well, I am your theme; you have the start of me; I am dejected; ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me; use me as you will. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,

Stands still in esperance; lives not in fear! Shakesf. K. Lear.

Nor think to die, dejects my lofty mind;

All that I dread is leaving you behind! Pope's R. of the Lock.

2. To change the form with grief; to make to look sad.

Eneas here beheld, of form divine,

A godlike youth in glitt'ring armour shine,

With great Marcellus keeping equal pace;

But gloomy were his eyes, dejected was his face. Dryd. Æn.

DEJECT. adj. [dejectus, Latin.] Cast down; afflicted; low-spirited.

I am of ladies most deject and wretched,

That suck'd the honey of his musick vows. Shakesf. Hamlet.

DEJECTEDLY. adv. [from deject.] In a dejected manner;
afflictedly.

No man in that passion doth look strongly, but dejectedly; and that repulsion from the eyes, diverteth the spirits, and gives heat more to the ears, and the parts by them. Bacon's N. Hist.

DEJECTEDNESS. n. f. [from dejected.] A being cast down; a lowness of spirits. Dict.

DEJECTION. n. f. [dejection, Fr. from dejectio, Lat.]

even hope itself is swallowed up in despair. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Weakness; inability.

The effects of such an alkalescent state, in any great de- gree, are thirst and a dejection of appetite, which putrid things occasion more than any other. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. [In medicine.] A going to stool.

The liver should continually separate the choler from the blood, and empty it into the intestines, where there is good use for it, not only to provoke dejection, but also to attenuate the chyle. Ray on the Creation.

DEJECTURE. n. f. [from deject.] The excrements.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity, the symptoms of which are excess of animal secretions; as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid dejectures, leanness, weakness, and thirst. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DEJERA'TION. n. f. [from dejero, Lat.] A taking of a solemn oath. Dict.

ing, or making a god.

DEIFORM. adj. [from deus and forma, Latin.] Of a godlike form.

TO DEIFY. v. a. [deifier, Fr. of deus and fio, Latin.]

1. To make a god of; to adore as god; to transfer into the number of the divinities.

Daphnis, the fields delight, the shepherds love,

Renown'd on earth, and deify'd above. Dryden.

Even the seals which we have of Julius Cæsar, which we know to be antique, have the star of Venus over them, though they were all graven after his death, as a note that he was deified. Dryden's Virg. Æn. Dedicat.

Persuade the covetous man not to deify his money, and the proud man not to adore himself. South's Sermons.

Half of thee

Is deify'd before thy death. Prior.

2. To praise excessively; to extol one as if he were a god.

He did again so extol and deify the pope, as made all that he had said in praise of his master and mistress seem temperate and passable. Bacon's Henry VIII.

3. To intrust; to commit to another's power and jurisdiction.

As God hath imprinted his authority in several parts upon several estates of men, as princes, parents, spiritual guides; so he hath also delegated and committed part of his care and providence unto them. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

We are to remember, that as God is the universal monarch of the world, so we have all the relation of fellow-subjects to him; and can pretend no farther jurisdiction over each other, than what he has delegated to us. Decay of Piety.

Why does he wake the correspondent moon,

And fill her willing lamp with liquid light,

Commanding her, with delegated pow'rs,

To beautify the world, and bless the night? Prior.

4. To appoint judges to hear and determine a particular cause.

DE'LEGATE. n. f. [delegatus, Latin.]

1. A deputy; a commissioner; a vicar; any one that is sent to act for, or represent another.

If after her

Any shall live, which dare true good prefer,

Every such person is her delegate,

T'accomplish that which should have been her fate. Donne.

There must be severe exactors of accounts from their delegates and ministers of justice. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Let the young Austrian then her terrors bear;

Great as he is, her delegate in war. Prior.

Elect by Jove, his delegate of sway,

With joyous pride the summons I'd obey. Pope's Odyssey.

Their due connection with the end design'd. Blackm. Creat.

When love once pleads admission to our hearts,

In spite of all the virtue we can boast,

The woman that deliberates is lost.

Addison.

DELIBERATE. adj. [deliberatus, Latin.]

1. Circumspect; wary; advised; discreet.

2. Slow; tedious; not sudden.

Commonly therefore it is for virtuous considerations, that wisdom so far prevaileth with men as to make them desirous of slow and deliberate death, against the stream of their sensual inclination. Hooker, b. v. f. 46.

Echoes are some more sudden, and chop again as soon as the voice is delivered; others are more deliberate, that is, give more space between the voice and the echo, which is caused by the local nearness or distance. Bacon's Natural History.

DELIBERATELY. adv. [from deliberate.] Circumspectly; advisedly; warily.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies; knows better than any man what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall; but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, is sure to put his staff before him. Dryden.

DELIBERATENESS. n. f. [from deliberate.] Circumspection; wariness; coolness; caution.

They would not stay the ripening and season of counsels, or fair production of acts, in the order, gravity, and deliberateness besitting a parliament. King Charles.

DELIBERATION. n. f. [deliberatio, Latin.] The act of deliberating; thought in order to choice.

O God, command deliverances for Jacob. Pf. xlv. 4.

Whate'er befalls, your life shall be my care;
One death, or one deliv'rance we will share. Dryden's Æn.

3. The act of speaking; utterance; pronunciation.

If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one that in her sex, her years profession,
Wisdom and constancy, hath amaz'd me more Than I dare blame my weakness. Sh. All's well that ends well.

4. The act of bringing children.

Ne'er mother

Rejoic'd d. liverance more. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

People have a superstitious belief, that in the labour of women it helpeth to the easy deliverance. Bacon's Natural History.

DELIVERER. n. f. [from deliver.]

1. A saver; a rescuer; a preserver; a releaser.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour; and this, although the deliverer came from the one end of the world unto the other.

Bacon's Holy War.

By that feed

Is meant thy great deliverer, who shall bruise

The serpent's head. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 149.

Andrew Doria has a statue erected to him at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the glorious title of deliverer of the commonwealth; and one of his family another, that calls him its preserver. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Nor did he in any degree contribute to the delivery of his house, which was at first imagined, because it was so ill, or not at all defended. Clarendon, b. viii.

4. Utterance; pronunciation; speech.

We alledge what the scriptures themselves do usually speak, for the saving force of the word of God, not with restraint to any certain kind of delivery, but howsoever the same shall chance to be made known. Hooker, b. v. sect. 22.

5. Use of the limbs; activity.

The earl was the taller, and much the stronger; but the duke had the neater limbs, and freer delivery. Wotton.

6. Childbirth.

Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out. Is. xxvi. 7.

DELL. n. f. [from dal, Dutch.]

1. A pit; a valley; a hole in the ground; any cavity in the earth. Obsolete.

The while, the like same unhappy ewe,

Whose clouted leg her hurt doth shew,

Fell headlong into a dell. Spenser's Pastorals.

I know each lane, and every alley green,

Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood. Milt. Parad. Lost.

But, foes to sun-shine, most they took delight

In dells and dales, conceal'd from human sight. Tickell.

DELPH. n. f. [from Delft, the name of the capital of Delft-land.] A fine sort of earthen ware.

A supper worthy of herself;

Five nothings in five plates of delph. Swift.

DELTOIDE. adj. [from delta, the fourth letter of the Greek alphabet; so called by reason of its resembling this letter.]

An epithet applied to a triangular muscle arising from the clavicle, and from the process of the same, whose action is to raise the arm upward.

Cut still more of the deltoid muscle, and carry the arm backward. Sharp's Surgery.

DELUDABLE. adj. [from delude.] Liable to be deceived; that is easily imposed on.

VOL. I.

Not well understanding omniscience, he is not so ready to deceive himself as to falsify unto him whose cogitation is no ways deludable. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

To DELUDE. v. a. [deludo; Latin]

1. To beguile; to cheat; to deceive; to impose on;

O, give me leave, I have deluded you;

'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam'd;

But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail'd. Shak. H. VI.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence

Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince. Dryden's Æn.

2. To disappoint; to frustrate.

DELUDER. n. f. [from delude.]

1. A beguiler; a deceiver; an impostor; a cheat; a false pretender.

Say, flatterer, say, ah fair deluder speak;

Answer me this, ere yet my heart does break. Granville.

1. To dig; to open the ground with a spade.

It shall go hard

But I will delve one yard below the mines;

And blow them at the moon. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Delve of convenient depth your thrashing floor;

With temper'd clay then fill and face it o'er. Dryd. Georg.

Besides, the filthy swine will oft invade

Thy firm inclosure, and with delving snout

The rooted forest undermine.

Philips.

2. To fathom; to sift; to sound one's opinion.

What's his name and birth?

—I cannot delve him to the root: his father

Was call'd Sicilius.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

DELVE. n. f. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pitfall; a den; a cave.

He by and by

His feeble feet directed to the cry;

Which to that shady delve him brought at last,

Where Mammon earst did sun his treasury. Fairy Queen.

Such a light and metall'd dance

Saw you never yet in France;

And by landmen, for the nonce,

That turn round like grindle-stones,

Which they dig out fro' the delves,

For their bairns bread, wives, and selves. Ben. Johnson.

A DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. Dict.

DELVER. n. f. [from delve.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

DELUGE. n. f. [deluge; French, from diluvium, Latin.]

1. A general inundation; a laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force

His channel to a new or narrow course,

No longer then within his banks he dwells,

First to a torrent, then a deluge swells.

Denham.

3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

To DELUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow;

By which the delug'd earth would useless grow. Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in Implacable, 'till delug'd by the foam

The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss. Philips.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood,

Shall deluge all.

Pope's Epist. iii. l. 137.

DELUSION. n. f. [delusio, Latin.]

1. A cheat; guile; deceit; treachery; fraud; collusion; falsehood.

2. A false representation; illusion; error; a chimerical thought.

Who therefore seeks in these

True wisdom, finds her not, or by delusion. Milt. Par. Reg.

I waking, view'd with grief the rising sun,

And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone. Prior.

DELUSIVE. adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,

Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear.

Prior.

The happy whimsy you pursue,

'Till you at length believe it true;

Caught by your own delusive art,

You fancy first, and then assert.

Prior.

While the base and groveling multitude of different nations, ranks and ages were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest.

A vast variety of phenomena, and those many of them so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake.

Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

DELU'SORY. adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to deceive.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusory prejudice. Glanv. Sceps. c. 12.

DE'MAGOGUE. n. f. [δῆμαγωγός.] A ringleader of the rabble; a populous and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. South's Sermon.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice upon this branch of their art. Swift.

DEMA'IN.

DEME'AN. } n. f. [domaine, French.]

DEME'SNE.

That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to feodum or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders; although the copyhold belonging to any manor, according to many good lawyers, is also accounted demeans. Philips.

Having now provided

A gentleman of noble parentage,

Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied. Shakespeare.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and seignior, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies on Ireland.

The defects in those acts for planting forest-trees might be fully supplied, since they have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskilfully made, and thriving accordingly. Swift.

DEMA'ND. n. f. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. Dan. iv. 17.

Giving vent, gives life and strength to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them. Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily. Addison's Spectator, No. 124.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand: in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or seising of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law. Blount.

To DEMA'ND. v. a. [demander, French.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,

Is dearly bought, 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakespeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David *demand*ed of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered. 2 Sa. xi. 7.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Young one,

Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,

They crave to be *demand*ed. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

The oracle of Apollo being *demand*ed, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, reply'd, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Peacham on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMA'NDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation, already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

DEMA'NDANT. n. f. [from demand.] He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands. Coke.

One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted. Spectator.

DEMA'NDER. n. f. [demandeur, French.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.

2. One that asks a civil question.

3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.

They grow very fast and fat, which also bettereth their taste, and delivereth them to the demanders ready use at all seasons. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

4. A dunner; one that demands a debt.

DEME'AN. n. f. [from demener, French.]

1. A mien; presence; carriage; demeanour; deportment.

At his feet, with sorrowful demean,

And deadly hue, an armed corse did lie. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

To DEME'AN. v. a. [from demener, French.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately. South's Sermons.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever. Tillotson, Sermon i.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains,

How with so high a nymph he might

Demean himself the wedding-night. Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.

Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad;

Else he would never so demean himself. Sh. Com. of Errors.

DEME'ANCUR. n. f. [demèner, French.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain. Sidney, b. ii.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour. Hooker, b. i.

His gestures fierce

He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone,

As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen. Milton's Par. Lost.

To whom thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek,

Ill worthy I, such title should belong

To me transgressor! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 162.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at the Isle of Ree, both at the landing, and upon the retreat. Clar.

DEME'RIT. n. f. [démérite, Fr. from demeritus, of demereor, Latin.] The opposite to merit; ill-deserving; what makes one worthy of blame or punishment.

They should not be able once to stir, or to murmur, but it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits. Spenser on Ireland.

Thou liv'st by me; to me thy breath resign;

Mine is the merit, the demerit thine. Dryden's Fables.

Whatever they acquire by their industry or ingenuity, should be secure, unless forfeited by any demerit or offence against the custom of the family. Temple.

2. Anciently the same with merit; desert.

'Tis yet to know,

Which when I know that boasting is an honour,

I shall promulgate, I fetch my life and being

From men of royal siege; and my demerits

May speak, unbonnetting, to as proud a fortune

As this that I have reach'd. Shakespeare's Othello.

To DEME'RIT. v. a. [demeriter, French.] To deserve blame or punishment.

DEME'RSED. adj. [from demersus, of demergo, Latin.] Plunged; drowned. Dict.

To DEMU'R. v. n. [demeurer, French; dimorare, Italian; demorari, Latin.]

1. To delay a process in law by doubts and objections. See DEMURRER.

To this plea the plaintiff demurred. Walton's Angler.

2. To pause in uncertainty; to suspend determination; to hesitate; to delay the conclusion of an affair.

Upon this rub the English ambassadours thought fit to demur, and so sent into England to receive directions from the lords of the council. Hayward.

Running into demands, they expect from us a sudden resolution in things, wherein the devil of Delphos would demur. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.

He must be of a very sluggish or querulous humour, that shall demur upon setting out, or demand higher encouragements than the hope of heaven. Decay of Piety.

News of my death from rumour he receiv'd,
And what he wish'd, he easily believ'd;
But long demurr'd, though from my hand he knew
I liv'd, so loth he was to think it true. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

3. To doubt; to have scruples or difficulties; to deliberate.
There is something in our composition, that thinks and apprehends, and reflects and deliberates, determines and doubts, consents and denies; that wills and demurs, and resolves and chuses, and rejects. Bentley.

To DEMU'R. v. a. To doubt of.

The latter I demur; for in their looks

Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears. Milt. P. L.

DEMU'R. n. f. [from the verb.] Doubt; hesitation; suspense of opinion.

O progeny of heav'n, empyreal thrones!

With reason hath deep silence and demur

Seiz'd us, though undismay'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Certainly the highest and dearest concerns of a temporal life are infinitely less valuable than those of an eternal; and consequently ought, without any demur at all, to be sacrificed to them, whensoever they come in competition with them. South.

All my demurs but double his attacks;

At last he whispers, Do, and we go snacks. Pope's Epistles.

DEMU'RE. adj. [des mœurs, French.]

1. Sober; decent.

Lo! two most lovely virgins came in place,

With countenance demure, and modest grace. Fairy Queen.

Come, penfive nun, devout and pure,

Sober, stedfast and demure. Milton.

2. Grave; affectedly modest: it is now generally taken in a sense of contempt.

After a demure travel of regard, I tell them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

There be many wise men, that have secret hearts and transparent countenances; yet this would be done with a demure abasing of your eye sometimes. Bacon, Essay 23.

A company of mice, peeping out of their holes, spied a cat, that lay and looked so demure as if there had been neither life nor soul in her. L'Estrange.

So cat, transform'd, sat gravely and demure,

'Till mouse appear'd, and thought himself secure. Dryden.

Jove sent and found, far in a country scene,

Truth, innocence, good-nature, look serene;

From which ingredients, first, the dext'rous boy

Pick'd the demure, the aukward, and the coy. Swift.

To DEMU'RE. v. n. [from the noun.] To look with an affected modesty.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,

And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour,

Demuring upon me. Shakesp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

DEMU'RELY. adv. [from demure.] With affected modesty; solemnly; with pretended gravity.

Put on a sober habit,

Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,

Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely. Shakesp.

Esop's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman, sat very demurely at the board's end, 'till a mouse ran before her. Bacon.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,

Soft smiling, and demurely looking down;

But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden's Fables.

2. In the following line it is the same with solemnly. Warb.

Hark, how the drums demurely wake the sleepers! Shakesp.

DEMU'RENESS. n. f. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.

Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMU'RRAGE. n. f. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEN

DEMURRER. n. f. [demeurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco vel morari.] A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge, with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is there stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cowel.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEN. n. f. [den, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole, which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens and caves under the earth. Hooker, b. i. f. 4.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den,

And fright him there? Shakespeare's King John.

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,

Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;

The cavern, only to her father known,

By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryden's Fables.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes;

In woods and fields a wild destruction makes. Dryd. Virgil.

3. Den may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both. Gilson's Camden.

DENAY. n. f. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say

My love can give no place, bide no denay. Sh. Twel. Night.

DENDRO'LOGY. n. f. [δέσδρον and λόγος.] The natural history of trees.

DENI'ABLE. adj. [from deny.] That which may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENI'AL. n. f. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial:

I must and will have Catharine to my wife. Shakespeare.

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much: on the other side, to find people so full of humanity, did comfort us. Bacon's New Atlantis.

He, at every fresh attempt, is repell'd

With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden's Ann. Mir.

3. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him. South's Sermons.

DENI'ER. n. f. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watts's Logick, p. i. c. 6. f. 3.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction. South's Sermons.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier: sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Charles.

DENIE'R. n. f. [from denarius, Lat. It is pronounced as deneer, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sou.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?

—No, not a denier.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

To DENIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Latin] To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own suffitus. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness. Boyle.

DENIGRA'TION.

DENIGRA'TION. n. f. [denigratio, Latin.] A blackening, or making black.

These are the advenient and artificial ways of denigration, answerably whereto may be the natural progress. Brown.

In several instances of denigration the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts. Boyle.

DENIZA'TION. n. f. [from denizen.] The act of infranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens appears by the charters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them.

Davies on Ireland.

DENIZEN. } n. f. [from dinasiddyn, a man of the city, or dis-
DENISON. } nesydd, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one infranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Davies's Preface.

Thus th' Almighty fire began: ye gods,

Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,

From whence these murmurs?

Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to feed as a free denison of the world. Grew's Cosm. b. iii. c. 2.

He summons straight his denizens of air;

The lucid squadrons the sails repair. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

TO DE'NIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To infranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several

To these three places, yet all are in all;

Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous;

Falshood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous.

Donne.

TO DENOMINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

Their commendable purpose being not of every one understood, they have been in latter ages construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorified creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places. Hooker, b. v.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious, to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills? Hammond's Fundamentals.

DENOMINA'TION. n. f. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians?

Spenser's State of Ireland.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryden's Defence of Dramatick Poesy.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the Heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like. South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DENO'MINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That which gives a name; that which confers a distinct appellation.

2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year. Cocker's Arithmetick.

DENOMINA'TOR. n. f. [from denominate.] The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DENOMINA'TOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in  $\frac{6}{8}$ , 8 the denominator shews you, that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 6 shews, that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Denominator of any proportion, is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 5) 30 (6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio. Harris.

DENOTA'TION. n. f. [denotatio, Latin.] The act of denoting.

TO DENO'TE. v. a. [denoto, Latin.] To mark; to be a sign of; to betoken; to shew by signs; as, a quick pulse denotes a fever.

TO DENOUNCE. v. a. [denuncio, Latin; denoncer, French.]

1. To threaten by proclamation.

VOL. I.

I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish. Deut.

He of their wicked ways

Shall them admonish, denouncing wrath to come

On their impenitence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 815.

They impose their wild conjectures for laws upon others, and denounce war against all that receive them not. Dec. of Piety.

2. To threaten by some outward sign or expression.

He ended frowning, and his look denounc'd

Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous

To less than gods. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 106.

The sea grew white; the rolling waves from far,

Like heralds, first denounce the watry war.

Dryden.

3. To give information against.

Archdeacons ought to propose parts of the New Testament to be learned by heart by inferior clergymen, and denounce such as are negligent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DENOUNCEMENT. n. f. [from denounce.] The act of proclaiming any menace; the proclamation of intended evil; denunciation.

False is the reply of Cain upon the denouncement of his curse, My iniquity is greater than can be forgiven: Brown's Vu. Err.

DENO'UNCER. n. f. [from denounce.] One that declares some menace.

Here comes the sad denouncer of my fate,

To toll the mournful knell of separation.

Dryden.

DENSE. adj. [densus, Latin.] Close; compact; approaching to solidity; having small interstices between the constituent particles.

The cause of cold is the density of the body; for all dense bodies are colder than most other bodies, as metals, stone, glass; and they are longer in heating than softer bodies. Bacon.

In the air the higher you go, the less it is compressed, and consequently the less dense it is; and so the upper part is exceedingly thinner than the lower part which we breathe.

Locke.

TO DE'NSHIRE. v. a. A barbarous term of husbandry.

Burning of land, or burn-bating, is commonly called den-shiring, that is, Devenshiring or Denbighshiring, because most used or first invented there. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DENSITY. n. f. [densitas, Latin.] Closeness; compactness; close adhesion, or near approach of parts.

Whilst the densest of metals, gold, if foliated, is transparent, and all metals become transparent, if dissolved in menstruums or vitrified, the opacity of white metals ariseth not from their density alone. Newton's Opticks.

The air within the vessels being of a less density, the outward air would press their sides together; and, being of a greater density, would expand them so as to endanger the life of the animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DENTAL. adj. [dentalis, Latin.]

1. Belonging or relating to the teeth.

2. [In grammar.] Pronounced principally by the agency of the teeth.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 198.

The dental consonants are easy, therefore let them be next; first the labio-dentals, as also the lingua-dentals. Holder's Elem.

DENTAL. n. f. A small shell-fish.

Two small black and shining pieces, seem, by the shape, to have been formed in the shell of a dental. Woodward on Fossils.

DENTE'LLI. n. f. [Italian.] Modillions.

The modillions, or dentelli, make a noble show by graceful projections. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 415.

DENTICULA'TION. n. f. [denticulatus, Latin.] The state of being set with small teeth.

He omits the denticulation of the edges of the bill, or those small oblique incisions made for the better retention of the prey. Grew's Musæum.

DENTICULATED. adj. [denticulatus, Latin.] Set with small teeth.

DENTIFRICE. n. f. [dens and frico, Latin.] A powder made to scour the teeth.

Is this grey powder a good dentifrice? Ben. John's Catil.

The shells of all sorts of shell-fish, being burnt, obtain a caustick nature: most of them, so ordered and powdered, make excellent dentifrices. Grew's Musæum.

DENTITION. n. f. [dentitio, Latin.]

1. The act of breeding the teeth.

2. The time at which childrens teeth are bred.

TO DENU'DATE. v. a. [denudo, Latin.] To divest; to strip; to lay naked.

'Till he has denudated himself of all incumbrances, he is unqualified. Decay of Piety.

DENUDA'TION. n. f. [from denudate.] The act of stripping, or making naked.

TO DENU'DE. v. a. [denudo, Lat.] To strip; to make naked; to divest.

Not a treaty can be obtained, unless we would denude ourself of all force to defend us. Clarendon, b. vi.

If in Summer-time you denude a vine-branch of its leaves, the grapes will never come to maturity. Ray on the Creation.

The eye, with the skin of the eye-lid, is denuded, to shew the muscle. Sharp's Surgery.

DENUNCIATION. n. f. [denunciatio, Latin.] The act of denouncing; the proclamation of a threat; a publick menace.

In a denunciation or indictment of a war, the war is not confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

Christ tells the Jews, that, if they believe not, they shall die in their sins: did they never read those denunciations? Ward.

Midst of these denunciations, and notwithstanding the warning before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve.

DENUNCIATOR. n. f. [from denuncio, Latin.]

1. He that proclaims any threat.
2. He that lays an information against another.

The denunciator does not make himself a party in judgment, as the accuser does. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO DENY. v. a. [denier, French; denego, Latin.]

1. To contradict an accusation; not to confess.
2. To refuse; not to grant.

Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not; for she was afraid. Gen.

My young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which Great nature cries—deny not. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Ah, charming fair, said I,
How long can you my bliss and your's deny? Dryden.

3. To abnegate; to disown.

It shall be therefore a witness unto you, lest you deny your God. Josh. xxiv. 27.

4. To renounce; to disregard; to treat as foreign or not belonging to one.

The best sign and fruit of denying ourselves, is mercy to others. Sprat's Sermons.

When St. Paul says, if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable: he considers Christians as denying themselves in the pleasures of this world, for the sake of Christ. Atterbury's Sermons, Pref.

TO DEOBSTRUCT. v. a. [deobstruo, Latin.] To clear from impediments; to free from such things as hinder a passage.

It is a singular good wound-herb, useful for deobstructing the pores of the body. More's Antidote against Atheism.

Such as carry off the faeces and mucus, deobstruct the mouth of the lacteals, so as the chyle may have a free passage into the blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.

DEOBSTRUENT. n. f. [deobstruens, Latin.] A medicine that has the power to resolve viscidities, or to open by any means the animal passages.

All fopes are attenuating and deobstruent, resolving viscid substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DEODAND. n. f. [deo dandum, Latin.] A thing given or forfeited to God for the pacifying his wrath, in case of any misfortune, by which any Christian comes to a violent end, without the fault of any reasonable creature; as, if a horse should strike his keeper, and so kill him; if a man, in driving a cart, and endeavouring to rectify something about it, should fall so as the cart-wheels, by running over him, should press him to death; if one should be felling a tree, and giving warning to company by, when the tree were near falling, to look to themselves, and any of them should nevertheless be slain by the fall of the tree; in these cases the horse, the cart-wheel, cart and horses, and the tree, are to be given to God; that is, sold and distributed to the poor, for an expiation of this dreadful event, though occasioned by unreasonable, senseless, and dead creatures: and though this be given to God, yet is it forfeited to the king by law, as executor in this case, to see the price of these distributed to the poor. Cowel.

TO DEOPPILATE. v. a. [de and oppilo, Latin.] To deobstruct; to clear a passage; to free from obstructions.

DEOPPILATION. n. f. [from deoppilate.] The act of clearing obstructions; the removal of whatever obstructs the vital passages.

Though the grosser parts be excluded again, yet are the dissoluble parts extracted, whereby it becomes effectual in deoppilations. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 21.

DEOPPILATIVE. adj. [from deoppilate.] Deobstruent.

A physician prescribed him a deoppilative and purgative apozem. Harvey on Consumption.

DEOSCUATION. n. f. [deosculatio, Latin.] The act of kissing.

We have an enumeration of the several acts of worship required to be performed to images, viz. processions, genuflections, thurifications and deosculations. Stillingsfleet.

TO DEPAINT. v. a. [depeint, French.]

1. To picture; to describe by colours; to paint; to shew by a painted resemblance.

He did unwilling worship to the saint,
That on his shield depainted he did see. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To describe.

Such ladies fair would I depaint
In roundelay, or sonnet quaint. Gay's Pastorals.

TO DEPART. v. n. [depart, French.]

1. To go away from a place.

When the people departed away, Susanna went into her garden. Susan. vii.

He said unto him, go in peace; so he departed from him a little way. 2 Kings v. 19.

They departed quickly from the sepulchre, with fear and great joy, and did run to bring his disciples word. Mat. xxviii.

He, which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made. Shak. Henry V.

Barbarossa stayed his course, and returned to Castronovum, whence, better appeased with presents, he departed out of that bay. Knolles's History of the Turks.

And could'st thou leave me, cruel, thus alone;
Not one kind kiss from a departing son!
No look, no last adieu! Dryden's Aeneis.

2. To desist from a practice.

He cleaved unto the fins of Jeroboam, he departed not therefrom. 2 Kings iii. 3.

3. To be lost; to perish.

The good departed away, and the evil abode still. 2 Esd. iii.

4. To desert; to revolt; to fall away; to apostatise.

In transgressing and lying against the Lord, and departing away from our God. Is. lix. 13.

5. To desist from a resolution or opinion.

His majesty prevailed not with any of them to depart from the most unreasonable of all their demands. Clarendon, b. viii.

6. To dye; to de cease; to leave the world.

As her soul was in departing; for she died. Gen. iii. 5. 18.

Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word. Lu. xxix.

As you wish Christian peace to souls departed, Stand these poor people's friend. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

TO DEPART. v. a. To quit; to leave; to retire from.

You have had dispatch in private by the consul;
You are will'd by him this evening
To depart Rome. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

TO DEPART. v. a. [partir, French; partior, Latin.] To divide; to separate.

DEPART. n. f. [depart, French.]

1. The act of going away.

I had in charge, at my depart from France,
To marry princess Marg'ret. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

2. Death.

When your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,
Tidings, as swiftly as the post could run,
Were brought me of your loss and his depart. Shak. H. VI.

3. [With chymists.] An operation so named, because the particles of silver are departed or divided from gold, or other metal, when they were before melted together in the same mass, and could not be separated any other way. Diet.

DEPARTER. n. f. [from depart.] One that refines metals by separation.

DEPARTMENT. n. f. [departement, French.] Separate allotment; province or business assigned to a particular person.

The Roman fleets, during their command at sea, had their several stations and departments: the most considerable was the Alexandrian fleet, and the second was the African. Arbuthnot.

DEPARTURE. n. f. [from depart.]

1. A going away.

For thee, fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and Do'st seem so ignorant, we'll force it from thee
By a sharp torture. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

What besides
Of sorrow, and dejection, and despair,
Our frailty can sustain, thy tidings bring,
Departure from this happy place. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

2. Death; de cease; the act of leaving the present state of existence.

Happy was their good prince in his timely departure, which barred him from the knowledge of his son's miseries. Sidney.

They were seen not only all the while our Saviour was upon earth, but survived after his departure out of this world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

3. A forsaking; an abandoning.

The fear of the Lord, and departure from evil, are phrases of like importance. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

DEPA'CENT. adj. [depa'scens, Latin.] Feeding greedily.

TO DEPA'STURE. v. a. [from depa'scor, Latin.] To eat up; to consume by feeding upon it.

They keep their cattle, and live themselves in bodies pasturing upon the mountains, and removing still to fresh land, as they have depa'stured the former. Spenser's Ireland.

TO DEPAUPERATE. v. a. [depaupero, Lat.] To make poor; to impoverish; to consume.

Liming does not depauperate; the ground will last long, and bear large grain. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Great evacuations, which carry off the nutritious humours, depauperate the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DEPE'CTIBLE. adj. [from depe'cto, Latin.] Tough; clammy; tenacious.

It may be also, that some bodies have a kind of lentor, and are of a more depe'ctible nature than oil; as we see it evident in coloration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a very great quantity of brasil or wine. Bacon's Nat. H.

To DEPE'INCT. v. a. [depeindre, French.] To depaint; to paint; to describe in colours. A word of Spenser.

Most happy he,
Whose least delight sufficeth to deprive
Remembrance of all pains which him oppress. Spenser.

4. To put out of an office.

A minister, deprived for inconformity, said, that if they deprived him it should cost an hundred mens lives. Bacon.

DEPTH. n. f. [from deep, of diep, Dutch.]

1. Deepness; the measure of any thing from the surface downwards.

As for men, although they had buildings in many places higher than the depth of the water, yet that inundation had a long continuance. Bacon's New Atlantis.

We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms. Bacon.

The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden's Æn.

For though, in nature, depth and height
Are equally held infinite,
In poetry the height we know
'Tis only infinite below. Swift.

2. Deep place; not a shoal.

The false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

3. The abyss; a gulph of infinite profundity.

When he prepared the heavens I was there, when he set a compass upon the face of the depth. Prov. viii. 27.

4. The middle or height of a season.

And in the depth of winter, in the night,
You plow the raging seas to coasts unknown. Denham.

The earl of Newcastle, in the depth of Winter, rescued the city of York from the rebels. Clarendon.

5. Abstruseness; obscurity.

There are greater depths and obscurities in an elaborate and well written piece of nonsense, than in the most abstruse tract of school divinity. Addison's Whig Examiner.

DEPTH of a Squadron or Batallion, is the number of men in the file. Milit. Dict.

To DEPTHEN. v. a. [diepen, Dutch.] To deepen, or make deeper. Dict.

To DEPURATE. v. a. [depurer, French, from depurgo, Lat.] To purify; to cleanse; to free any thing from its impurities.

Chemistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and in some measure to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chemical experiments we may better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more simple, or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to present them to us. Boyle.

DEPURATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Cleansed; freed from dregs and impurities.

2. Pure; not contaminated.

Neither can any boast a knowledge depurate from the defilement of a contrary, within this atmosphere of flesh. Glanv.

DEPURA'TION. n. f. [depuratio, Latin.]

1. The act of separating the pure from the impure part of any thing.

Brimstone is a mineral body, of fat and inflammable parts; and this is either used crude, and called sulphur vive, or is of a sadder colour, and, after depuration, such as we have in magdeleons, or rolls of a lighter yellow. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

What hath been hitherto discoursed, inclines us to look upon the ventilation and depuration of the blood as one of the principal and constant uses of respiration. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The cleansing of a wound from its filth.

To DEPU'RE. v. a. [depurer, French.]

1. To cleanse; to free from impurities.

depure, but that the same defection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankind. Raleigh.

DEPUTATION. n. f. [deputation, French.]

1. The act of deputing, or sending away with a special commission.

2. Vicegerency; the possession of any commission given.

Cut me off the heads

Of all the fav'rites that the absent king

In deputation left behind him here,

When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakesp. Henry IV.

He looks not below the moon, but hath designed the regiment of sublunary affairs unto sublunary deputations. Brown.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South's Sermons.

To DEPU'TE. v. a. [deputer, French.] To send with a special commission; to empower one to transact instead of another.

And Absalom said unto him, See thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear. 2 Sa.

A bishop, by deputing a priest or chaplain to administer the sacraments, may correct and remove him for his demerits. Ayliffe's Parergon.

And Linus thus, deputed by the rest,

The heroes welcome, and their thanks express'd. Roscomm.

DEPUTY. n. f. [deputé, Fr. from deputatus, Latin.] A lieutenant; a viceroy; one that is appointed by a special commission to govern and act instead of another.

He exerciseth dominion over them as the vicegerent and deputy of Almighty God. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He was vouched his immediate deputy upon earth, and viceroy of the creation, and lord lieutenant of the world. South.

2. Any one that transacts business for another.

Presbyters, absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies, who, in their stead, did but read homilies. Hooker, b. v. f. 21.

A man hath a body, and that body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices of life are, as it were, granted to him and his deputy; for he may exercise them by his friend. Bacon, Essay 28.

3. [In law.] One that exercises any office or other thing in another man's right, whose forfeiture or misdemeanour shall cause the officer or person for whom he acts to lose his office. Phillips.

To DEQUA'NTITATE. v. a. [from de and quantitas, Latin.] To diminish the quantity of.

This we affirm of pure gold; for that which is current, and passeth in stamp amongst us, by reason of its alloy, which is a proportion of silver or copper mixed therewith, is actually dequantitated by fire, and possibly by frequent extinction. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

DER. A term used in the beginning of names of places. It is generally to be derived from deon, a wild beast, unless the place stands upon a river; for then it may rather be fetched from the British dur, i. e. water. Gibson's Camden.

To DERA'CINATE. v. a. [deraciner, French.]

1. To pluck or tear up by the roots.

Her fallow leas,

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory

Doth root upon; while that the cutter rusts

That should deracinate such savagery. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. To abolish; to destroy; to extirpate.

To DERAIGN. } v. a. [disrationare, or dirationare, Latin.]

To DERA'IN. }

1. To prove; to justify.

When the parson of any church is disturbed to demand tythes in the next parish by a writ of indicavit, the patron shall have a writ to demand the advowson of the tythes being in demand; and when it is deraigned, then shall the plea pass in the court christian, as far forth as it is deraigned in the king's court. Blount.

2. To disorder; to turn out of course. Dict.

DERA'IGNMENT. } n. f. [from deraign]

DERA'INMENT. }

1. The act of deraigning or proving.

2. A disordering or turning out of course.

3. A discharge of profession; a departure out of religion.

In some places the substantive deraignment is used in the very literal signification with the French disfrayer, or desfranger; that is, turning out of course, displacing, or setting out of order; as deraignment or departure out of religion, and deraignment or discharge of their profession, which is spoken of those religious men who forsook their orders and professions. Blount.

DERA'Y. n. f. [from desfrayer, French, to turn out of the right way]

1. Tumult; disorder; noise.

2. Merriment; jollity; solemnity. Douglass.

To DERE. v. a. [derian, Saxon] To hurt. Obsolete.

So from immortal race he does proceed,

That mortal hands may not withstand his might;

Dred for his derring doe, and bloody deed;

For all in blood and spoil is his delight. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

DERELICTION.

DERELICTION. n. f. [derelictio, Latin.] An utter forsaking or leaving; an abandoning.

There is no other thing to be looked for, but the effects of God's most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace; dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.

DERELICTS. n. f. pl. [In law.] Such goods as are wilfully thrown away, or relinquished by the owner. Dict.

TO DERIDE. v. a. [derideo, Latin.]

1. To laugh at; to mock; to turn to ridicule; to scorn.

And before whose presence to offend with any the least unbecomeliness, we would be surely as loth as they who most reprehend or deride what we do. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

What shall be the portion of those who have derided God's word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred and religious? Tillotson, Sermon ii.

These sons, ye gods, who with flagitious pride

Insult my darkness, and my groans deride. Pope's Statius.

DERIDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mocker; a scoffer.

Upon the wilful violation of oaths, execrable blasphemies, and like contempts offered by deriders of religion, fearful tokens of divine revenge have been known to follow. Hooker.

2. A droll; a buffoon.

DERISION. n. f. [derisio, Latin.]

1. The act of deriding or laughing at.

2. Contempt; scorn; a laughing-stock.

I am in derision daily; every one mocketh me. Jer. xx. 7.

Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us. Pf. xlv. 13.

Ensnar'd, assaulted, overcome, led bound,

Thy foes derision, captive, poor and blind,

Into a dungeon thrust. Milton's Agonistes, l. 364.

Are we grieved with the scorn and derision of the prophane?

Thus was the blessed Jesus despised and rejected of men. Rogers.

Vanity is the natural weakness of an ambitious man, which exposes him to the secret scorn and derision of those he converses with. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 255.

DERISIVE. adj. [from deride.] Mocking; scoffing.

O'er all the dome they quaff, they feast;

Derisive taunts were spread from guest to guest,

And each in jovial mood his mate address. Pope's Odyssey.

DERISORY. adj. [derisorius, Latin.] Mocking; ridiculing.

DERIVABLE. adj. [from derive.] Attainable by right of descent or derivation.

God has declared this the eternal rule and standard of all honour derivable upon me, that those who honour him shall be honoured by him. South's Sermons.

DERIVATION. n. f. [derivatio, Latin.]

1. A draining of water; a turning of its course; letting out.

When it began to swell, it would every way discharge itself by any descents or declivities of the ground; and these issues and derivations being once made, and supplied with new waters pushing them forwards, would continue their course 'till they arrived at the sea, just as other rivers do. Burnet.

2. [In grammar.] The tracing of a word from its original.

Your lordship here seems to dislike my taking notice, that the derivation of the word substance favours the idea we have of it; and your lordship tells me, that very little weight is to be laid on it, on a bare grammatical etymology. Locke.

3. The tracing of any thing from its source.

As touching traditional communication, and tradition of those truths that I call connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of those truths have had the help of that derivation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. [In medicine.] The drawing of a humour from one part of the body to another.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote, or, it may be, contrary part, we call that revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wiseman on Tumours.

DERIVATIVE. adj. [derivativus, Latin.] Derived or taken from another.

As it is a derivative perfection, so it is a distinct kind of perfection from that which is in God. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DERIVATIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] The thing or word derived or taken from another.

For honour,

'Tis a derivative from me to mine,

And only that I stand for. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The word honestus originally and strictly signifies no more than creditable, and is but a derivative from honour, which signifies credit or honour. South's Sermons.

DERIVATIVELY. adv. [from derivative.] In a derivative manner.

TO DERIVE. v. a. [deriver, French, from derivo, Latin.]

1. To turn the course of any thing; letting out; communicating.

Company lessens the shame of vice by sharing it, and abates the torrent of a common odium by deriving it into many channels. South's Sermons.

2. To deduce from its original.

They endeavour to derive the varieties of colours from the various proportion of the direct progress or motion of these globules to their circumvolution, or motion about their own centre. Boyle on Colours.

This property of it seems rather to have been derived from the Pretorian soldiers; who insolently assumed the disposing of the empire. Decay of Piety.

Men derive their ideas of duration from their reflection on the train of ideas they observe to succeed one another in their own understandings. Locke.

From these two causes of the laxity and rigidity of the fibres, the methodists, an ancient set of physicians, derived all diseases of human bodies with a great deal of reason; for the fluids derive their qualities from the solids. Arbuthnot.

3. To communicate to another; as from the origin and source.

Christ having Adam's nature as we have, but incorrupt, deriveth not nature, but incorruption, and that immediately from his own person, unto all that belong unto him. Hooker.

The censors of these wretches, who, I am sure, could derive no sanctity to them from their own persons; yet upon this account, that they had been consecrated by the offering incense in them, were, by God's special command, sequestered from all common use. South's Sermons.

4. To communicate to by descent of blood.

Besides the readiness of parts, an excellent disposition of mind is derived to your lordship from the parents of two generations, to whom I have the honour to be known. Felton.

5. To spread; to diffuse gradually from one place to another.

The streams of the publick justice were derived into every part of the kingdom. Davies on Ireland.

6. [In grammar.] To trace a word from its origin.

TO DERIVE. v. n.

1. To come from; to owe its origin to.

He that resists the pow'r of Ptolomy,

Resists the pow'r of heav'n; for pow'r from heav'n

Derives, and monarchs rule by gods appointed. Prior.

1. Sad; solitary.

2. Barbarous; cruel. Obsolete.

DERNIER. adj. Last. It is a mere French word, and used only in the following phrase.

In the Imperial chamber, the term for the prosecution of an appeal is not circumscribed by the term of one or two years, as the law elsewhere requires in the Empire, this being the dernier resort and supreme court of judicature. Ayliffe's Parerg.

TO DEROGATE. v. a. [derogo, Latin.]

1. To do an act contrary to a preceding law or custom, so as to diminish its former value.

By several contrary customs and files used here, many of those civil and canon laws are controuled and derogated. Hale.

2. To lessen the worth of any person or thing; to disparage.

TO DEROGATE. v. n. To degenerate; to do a thing contrary to one's calling or dignity.

We should be injurious to virtue itself, if we did derogate from them whom their industry hath made great. Hooker.

DEROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;

Dry up in her the organs of increase,

And from her derogate body never spring

A babe to honour her!

Shakespeare's King Lear.

DEROGATION. n. f. [derogatio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking and making void a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon's Henry VII.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law. South's Sermon.

2. A disparaging; lessening or taking away the worth of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain. Hooker, Preface.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no dispraise. Spenser on Ireland.

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon, Essay 21.

I say

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

I believe there are none of these patriots who will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 39.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Latin.] Derogating; lessening the value of.

That spirits are corporeal seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets and charms, as we have declared before. Brown's Vulgar Err.

DEROGATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.] In a detracting manner. Dict.

DEROGATORINESS. n. f. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating. Dict.

DEROGATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Latin.] That lessens the value of.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

These deputed beings, as they are commonly understood, are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne's Phil. Frin.

DERVIS. n. f. [dervis, French.] A Turkish priest.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,

Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sandys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spectator.

DESCANT. n. f. [descanto, Italian.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat,

And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. Shakespeare.

The wakeful nightingale

All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure, or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,

And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;

For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shak. Rich. III.

Such kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren. Government of the Tongue.

TO DESCANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts.

2. To discourse at large; to make speeches: in a sense of censure or contempt.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,

Have no delight to pass away the time;

Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,

And descant on mine own deformity. Shakef. Richard III.

Com'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,

To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict? Milton.

A virtuous man should be pleased to find people descanting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvassed and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison's Freeholder.

TO DESCEND. v. a. [descendo, Latin.]

1. To come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.

The rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. Matt. vii. 25.

The brook that descended out of the mount. Deutr. ix. 21.

He cleft his head with one descending blow. Dryden.

Will is younger brother to a baronet, and descended of the ancient family of the Wimbles. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 108.

6. To fall in order of inheritance to a successor.

Should we allow that all the property, all the estate of the father, ought to descend to the eldest son; yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power, cannot descend unto him by inheritance. Locke.

The inheritance of both rule over men and property, in things sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Our author provides for the descending and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power to posterity, by the inheritance of his heir, succeeding to his father's authority. Locke.

7. To extend a discourse from general to particular considerations.

Congregations discerned the small accord that was among themselves, when they descended to particulars. Decay of Piety.

TO DESCEND. v. a. To walk downward upon any place.

He ended, and they both descend the hill;

Descended Adam to the bow'r, where Eve

Lay sleeping. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In all our journey through the Alps, as well when we climbed as when we descended them, we had still a river running along with the road. Addison on Italy.

In the midst of this plain stands a high hill, so very steep, that there would be no mounting or descending it, were not it made up of a loose crumbled earth. Addison on Italy.

DESCENDANT. n. f. [descendant, Fr. descendens, Latin.] The offspring of an ancestor; he that is in the line of generation at whatever distance.

The descendants of Neptune were planted there. Bacon.

O, true descendant of a patriot line,

Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see. Dryden.

He revealed his own will, and their duty, in a more ample manner than it had been declared to any of my descendants before them. Aiterbury's Sermons.

DESCENDENT. adj. [descendens, Latin. It seems to be established that the substantive should derive the termination from the French, and the adjective from the Latin.]

1. Falling; sinking; coming down; descending.

There is a regrefs of the sap in plants from above downwards; and this descendent juice is that which principally nourishes both fruit and plant. Ray on the Creation.

His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milt. P. L.
10. A single step in the scale of genealogy; a generation.
No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself. Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.
Then all the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd,
'Till aged Heli by due heritage it gain'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
11. A rank in the scale or order of being.
How have I then, with whom to hold converse,
Save with the creatures which I made, and those
To me inferior; infinite descents
Beneath what other creatures are to thee. Milton's P. Lost.
- TO DESCRIBE. v. a. [describo, Latin.]
1. To mark out any thing by the mention of its properties.
I pray thee, overname them; and as thou nam'st them,
I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
He that writes well in verse will often send his thoughts in search, through all the treasure of words that express any one idea in the same language, that so he may comport with the measures, or the rhyme of the verse which he writes, or with his own most beautiful and vivid sentiments of the thing he describes. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.
2. To delineate; to mark out; to trace: as a torch waved about the head describes a circle.
3. To distribute into proper heads or divisions.
Men pass'd through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book. Jos. xviii. 9.
4. To define in a lax manner by the promiscuous mention of qualities general and peculiar. See DESCRIPTION.
- DESCRIBER. n. f. [from describe.] He that describes.
From a plantation and colony of theirs, an island near Spain was by the Greek describers named Erythra. Brown.
- DESCRIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] A discoverer; a detector.
May think his labour vainly gone,
The glad descrier shall not miss
To taste the nectar of a kiss. Crasshaw.
- DESCRIPTION. n. f. [descriptio, Latin.]
1. The act of describing or making out any person or thing by perceptible properties.
2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.
A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a robe which is too heavy, is less an ornament than a burthen. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.
Sometimes misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortaliz'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry,
That run for ever by the muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still. Addison.
3. A lax definition.
This sort of definition, which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect when it is composed of the essential difference, added to general nature or genus. Watt's Logick.
4. The qualities expressed in a description.
I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
- TO DESCRY. v. a. [descrier, French.]
1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered; as, the scout descried the enemy, that he gave notice of their approach. This sense is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.
2. To spy out; to examine at a distance.
And the house of Joseph sent to descry Bethel. Judg. i. 23.
Edmund, I think, is gone to descry
Th' strength o' th' enemy. Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. To detect; to find out any thing concealed.
Of the king they got a sight after dinner in a gallery, and of the queen mother at her own table; in neither place descried, no, not by Cadinet, who had been lately ambassador in England. Wattm.

4. To discover; to perceive by the eye; to see any thing distant or absent.
Thus dight, into the court he took his way;
Both through the guard, which never him descry'd,
And through the watchmen, who him never spy'd. Hubbard's Tale.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath;
What's past and what's to come she can descry. Shak. H. VI.
That planet would, unto our eyes, describing only that part whereon the light falls, appear to be horned, as the moon seems. Raleigh's History of the World, b. i. c. 7.
And now their way to earth they had descri'd,
To Paradise first tending. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Although the motion of light be not descried, no argument can be made from thence to prove that light is not a body. Digby on Bodies.
A tow'r so high, it seem'd to reach the sky,
Stood on the roof, from whence we could descry
All Ilium. Denham.
Once more at least look back, said I,
Thyself in that large glass descry. Prior.
- DESCRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Discovery; thing discovered.
How near's the other army?
—Near, and on speedy foot, the main descry
Stands on the hourly thought. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- TO DESECRATE. v. a. [desecro, Lat.] To divert from the purpose to which any thing is consecrated.
The founders of monastries imprecated evil on those who should desecrate their donations. Salmon's Survey.
- DESECRATION. n. f. [from desecrate.] The abolition of consecration.
- DE'SERT. n. f. [desertum, Latin.] A wilderness; solitude; waste country; uninhabited place.
Be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword.
Of trembling I inhibit; then protest me
The baby of a girl. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He, looking round on every side, beheld
A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades. Paradise Reg.
- DE'SERT. adj. [desertus, Latin.] Wild; waste; solitary; uninhabited; uncultivated; untill'd.
I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakesf. Macbeth.
He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deutr. xxxii. 10.
The promises and bargains between two men in a desert island are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.
- TO DESERT. v. a. [deserter, French; desero, Latin.]
1. To forsake; to fall away from; to quit meanly or treacherously.
I do not remember one man, who heartily wished the passing of that bill, that ever deserted them till the kingdom was in a flame. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.
2. To leave; to abandon.
What is it that holds and keeps them in fixed stations and intervals, against an incessant and inherent tendency to desert them? Bentley's Sermons.
3. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.
- DESE'RT. n. f. [properly dessert: the word is originally French.] The last course; the fruit or sweetmeats with which a feast is concluded. See DESSERT.
- DESE'RT. n. f. [from desert.]
1. Qualities or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments; degree of merit or demerit.
Being of necessity a thing common, it is, through the manifold persuasions, dispositions, and occasions of men, with equal desert both of praise and dispraise, shunned by some, by others desired. Hooker, b. v. f. 40.
The base o' th' mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their states. Shakespeare's Timon.
Use every man after his desert, and who shall 'scape whipping? Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. Proportional merit; claim to reward.
More to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both. Shakesf. Timon.
All desert imports an equality between the good conferred and the good deserved, or made due. South's Sermons.
3. Excellence; right to reward; virtue.
- DESE'RTER. n. f. [from desert.]
1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post.
The members of both houses, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and outed of their places in parliament. King Charles.
Streight to their ancient calls, recall'd from air,
The reconcil'd deserters will repair. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
Hosts of deserters, who your honour sold,
And basely broke your faith for bribes of gold. Dryd. Æn.
2. He that leaves the army in which he is enlisted.

DES

They are the same deserters, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemies. Decay of Piety.

A deserter, who came out of the citadel, says the garrison is brought to the utmost necessity. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 59.

3. He that forsakes another; an abandoner.

The fair sex, if they had the deserter in their power, would certainly have shewn him more mercy than the Bacchanals did Orpheus. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

Thou, false guardian of a charge too good,

Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood. Pope.

DESE'RTION. n. f. [from desert.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.

Every compliance that we are persuaded to by one, is a contradiction to the commands of the other; and our adherence to one, will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other. Rogers, Serm. v.

3. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency; a sense of the dereliction of God; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.

Christ hears and sympathizes with the spiritual agonies of a soul under desertion, or the pressures of some stinging affliction. South's Sermons.

DESE'RTLESS. adj. [from desert.] Without merit; without claim to favour or reward.

She said she lov'd;

Lov'd me desertless, who, with shame, confess

Another flame had seiz'd upon my breast. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

TO DESERVE. v. a. [deservir, French.]

1. To be worthy of either good or ill.

Those they honoured, as having power to work or cease, as men deserved of them. Hooker, b. i.

Some of us love you well; and ev'n those some

Envy your great deservings, and good name. Shak. Hen. IV.

All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cup of their deservings. Shakespeare's King Lear.

What he deserves of you and me I know. Shak. H. VIII.

Yet well, if here would end

The misery: I deserv'd it, and would bear

My own deservings. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 727.

Courts are the places where best manners flourish,

Where the deserving ought to rise. Otway's Orphan.

A mother cannot give him death; though he

Deserves it, he deserves it not from me. Dryden's Ovid.

Since my Orazia's death I have not seen

A beauty so deserving to be queen,

He had been a person of great deservings from the republic, was an admirable speaker, and very popular. Swift.

2. To be worthy of reward.

According to the rule of natural justice one man may merit and deserve of another. South's Sermons.

DESE'RVEDLY. adv. [from deserve.] Worthily; according to desert, whether of good or evil.

For him I was not sent, nor yet to free

That people victor once, now vile and base,

Deservedly made vassal. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. iv.

A man deservedly cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert. Addis. Freeholder.

DESE'RVING. n. f. [from deserve.] A man who merits rewards. It is used, I think, only in a good sense.

Their love is never link'd to the deserver,

'Till his deserts are pass'd. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation; or otherwise great deservers do perchance grow intolerable presumers. Wotton.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deservers.

Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

DESE'CCANTS. n. f. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of sores; driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and wasted. Wiseman's Surgery.

TO DESICCATE. v. a. [desicco, Latin.] To dry up; to exhale moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it, the air with time getteth into the pores. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 842.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine helpeth to digest and desiccate the moisture. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun. Hale.

DESICCA'TION. n. f. [from desiccate.] The act of making dry; the state of being dried.

If the spirits issue out of the body, there followeth desiccation, induration, and consumption; as in brick, evaporation of bodies liquid, &c. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 329.

DESE'CCATIVE. adj. [from desiccate.] That which has the power of drying.

TO DESI'DERATE. v. a. [desidero, Lat.] To want; to miss; to desire in absence. A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desiderated problem. Cheyne.

DESI'DIOSE. adj. [desidiosus, Latin.] Idle; lazy; heavy. Diët.

TO DESI'GN. v. a. [designo, Latin; dessiner, French.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose: with for.

The acts of religious worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgment of a being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we. Stillingfleet.

You are not for obscurity design'd,

But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally; with to.

One of those places was designed by the old man to his son. Clarendon.

He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune; he was designed to the study of the law. Dryden.

4. To plan; to project; to form in idea.

We are to observe whether it be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well designed; then, whether it be well coloured, which be the two general heads. Wotton.

Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs

The new elected seat, and draws the lines. Dryden's Æn.

5. To mark out.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs. Locke.

DESI'GN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An intention; a purpose.

2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life? Tillotson, Sermon i.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A sedate settled design upon another man's life, put him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention. Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek medals one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes. Addison.

Thy hand strikes out some new design,

Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope's Epistles.

DESI'GNABLE. adj. [designo, Latin.] Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited: the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant. Digby.

DESIGNA'TION. n. f. [designatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token:

This is a plain designation of the duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Swift.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a titular pretence, grounded upon the will and designation of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESI'GNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadvertently; not fortuitously.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put them in pain; but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour. Locke.

Uses made things; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Creation.

DESI'GNER. n. f. [from design.]

1. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has therefore always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private. Decay of Piety.

2. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy. Addison.

DESI'GNING. participial adj. [from design.] Insidious; treacherous; deceitful; fraudulently artful.

'Twould shew me poor, indebted, and compell'd,

Designing, mercenary; and I know

You would not wish to think I could be bought. Scutcheon.

DESI'GNLESS. adj. [from design.] Without intention; without design; unknowing; inadvertent.

DESI'GNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.] Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly conspiring voices are as differing as the conditions of the respective fingers. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

DESI'GNMENT. n. f. [from design.]

1. An

D E S

1. A scheme of hostility.

News, lords, our wars are done:

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. A plot; a malicious intention.

She received advice both of the king's desperate estate, and of the duke's designments against her. Hayward.

3. The idea, or sketch of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvases; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;
For though that some mean artist's skill were shown
In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the fair designment was his own. Dryden.

DESIRABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box;
I immediately took the hint, and bought one, being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes.

Addison's Guardian, No. 97.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watts.

2. That which is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great sagacity, will improve his mind, toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of his will. Rogers, Sermon iii.

DESIRE. n. f. [desir, Fr. deseo, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] With; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind;

It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind. Dryden.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it. Locke.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the fort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

TO DESIRE. v. a. [desirer, French; desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold. Deutr. vii. 25.

2. To express wishes; to appear to long.

Jove beheld it with a desiring look. Dryden.

3. To ask; to intreat.

Sir, I intreat you home with me to dinner.
—I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
But since you take such int'rest in our woe,
And Troy's disastrous end desire to know,
I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell
What in our last fatal night befell. Dryden's Æn. l. ii.

DESIRER. n. f. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing; a wisher.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakesp. Cædolanus.

DESIROUS. adj. [from desire.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.

The same piety which maketh them that are in authority desirous to please and resemble God by justice, inflameth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Prov. xxiii. 3.

Men are drowsy and desirous to sleep before the fit of an ague, and yawn and stretch. Bacon's Nat. History, No. 296.

Adam the while,

Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of choicest flow'rs a garland. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Conjugal affection,

Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt,
Hath led me on, desirous to behold

Once more thy face. Milton's Agonistes.

DESIROUSNESS. n. f. [from desirous.] Fulness of desire; eagerness. Diët.

DESIROUSLY. adv. [from desirous.] Eagerly; with desire; with ardent wishes. Diët.

TO DESIST. v. n. [desisto, Latin.] To cease from any thing; to stop.

Desist, thou art discern'd,

And toil'st in vain; nor me in vain molest. Milt. Pa. Lost.

There are many who will not quit a project, though they find it pernicious or absurd; but will readily desist from it, when they are convinced it is impracticable. Addis. Freeholder.

DESISTANCE. n. f. [from desist.] The act of desisting; ces- sation.

Men usually give freeliest where they have not given before; and make it both the motive and excuse of their desistance from giving any more, that they have given already. Boyle.

D E S

DESISTIVE. adj. [desistus, Latin.] Ending; concluded.

Inceptive and desistive propositions are of this sort: the fogs vanish as the sun rises, but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish; therefore the sun is not yet risen. Watts's Logick, p. iii.

DESK. n. f. [disch, a table, Dutch.] An inclining table for the use of writers or readers, made commonly with a box or re- pository under it.

Tell her in the desk,

That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats. Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.
He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his bible before him.

Walton's Angler.

I have also been obliged to leave unfinished in my desk the heads of two essays. Pope.

Not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japann'd, avails

To writing of good sense.

Swift.

DESOLATE. adj. [desolatus, Latin]

1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.

Let us seek some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

This hero appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Broome on Epic Poetry.

2. Deprived of inhabitants; laid waste.

This city shall be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jer. xxvi.

3. Solitary; without society.

TO DESOLATE. v. a. [desolo, Latin.] To deprive of inha- bitants; to lay waste.

The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake, but was desolated by a particular deluge; for earthquakes are feldom in those parts: but, on the other side, they have such pouring rivers, as the rivers of Asia, Africa, and Europe are but brooks to them. Bacon, Essay 59.

Thick around

Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun

And dog, impatient bounding at the shot,

Worse than the season, desolate the fields. Thomson's Winter.

DESOLATELY. adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.

DESOLATION. n. f. [from desolate.] Destruction of inhabi- tants; ravage.

What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great compassion of their calamities. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Without her follows to myself and thee,

Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,

Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakesp. Richard III.

To complete

The scene of desolation stretch'd around,

The grim guards stand. Thomson's Summer, l. 1075.

2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy.

That dwelling place is unnatural to mankind; and then the terribleness of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it. Sidney, b. ii.

Then your hose shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation. Shakesp. As you like it.

My desolation does begin to make

A better life. Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

3. A place wasted and forsaken.

How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

Jer. l. 23.

DESPAIR. n. f. [desespoir, French.]

1. Hopelessness; despondence; loss of hope.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope, or never discovered it, stopt with despair. Sidney, b. ii.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor. iv. 8.

Weary'd, forsaken, and pursu'd at last,

All safety in despair of safety plac'd,

Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear

All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear. Denham.

Equal their flame, unequal was their care;

One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair. Dryden.

Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in mens minds, sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency. Locke.

2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.

Strangely visited people,

All swol'n and ulc'rous, pitiful to the eye;

The mere despair of surgery, he cures;

Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,

Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.

Are not all or most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremes? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other: may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair? Sprat's Sermons.

To

TO DESPA'IR. v. n. [despero, Latin.] To be without hope; to despond.

Though thou drewest a sword at thy friend, yet despair not; for there may be a turning. Ecclus. xxii. 21.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despair of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver. Bacon.

Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun. Wake's Preparation.

DESPA'IRER. n. f. [from despair.] One without hope.

He cheers the fearful, and commends the bold,

And makes despairers hope for good success. Dryden.

DESPA'IRFUL. adj. [despair and full.] Hopeless. Obsolete.

That sweet but four despairful care. Sidney, b. i.

DESPA'IRINGLY. adv. [from despairing.] In a manner betokening hopelessness or despondency.

He speaks severely and despairingly of our society. Boyle.

TO DESPA'TCH. v. a. [depescher, French.]

1. To send away hastily.

Doctor Theodore Coleby, a sober and intelligent man, I despatched immediately to Utrecht, to bring me some of the moxa, and learn the exact method of using it, from the man that sold it. Temple.

The good Æneas, whose paternal care

Julus' absence could no longer bear,

Despatch'd Achates to the ships in haste,

To give a glad relation of the past. Dryden's Virg. Æn.

2. To send out of the world; to put to death.

Edmund, I think, is gone,

In pity of his misery, to despatch

His nighted life.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

And the company shall stone them with stones, and despatch them with their swords. Ezek. xxiii. 47.

In combating, but two of you will fall;

And we resolve we will despatch you all.

Dryden.

Despatch me quickly, I may death forgive;

I shall grow tender else, and wish to live. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

3. To perform a business quickly; as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.

Therefore commanded he his chariot-man to drive without ceasing, and to despatch the journey, the judgment of God now following him. 2 Mac. ix. 4.

No sooner is one action despatched, which, by such a determination as the will, we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work. Locke.

4. To conclude an affair with another.

What, are the brothers parted?

—They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone. Shakesp.

DESPA'TCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hasty execution; speedy performance.

Affected despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. Bacon.

You'd see, could you her inward motions watch,

Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;

Then to a woman's meaning would you look,

Then read her backward.

Granville.

The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself. Addison's Spectator.

2. Conduct; management. Obsolete.

You shall put

This night's great business into my despatch,

Which shall, to all our nights and days to come,

Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. Express; hasty messenger or message; as, despatches were sent away.

DESPA'TCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.] Bent on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with despatchful looks, in haste

She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Let one despatchful bid some swain to lead

A well fed bullock from the grassy mead. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.

DESPERATE. adj. [desperatus, Latin.]

1. Without hope.

Since his exile she hath despis'd me most;

Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,

That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Shakespeare.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant; fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lords,

That any Englishman dare give me counsel,

Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure,

Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,

And live a subject.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He who goes on without any care or thought of reforming, such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

3. Irrecoverable; unfathomable; irrecoverable.

These debts may be well called desperate ones; for a mad man owes them. Shakespeare's Timon.

In a part of Asia the sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there. Locke.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends. Pope to Swift.

4. Mad; hot-brained; furious.

Were it not the part of a desperate physician to wish his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery? Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predominating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desperate fots and fools,

That durst depart from Aristotle's rules. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

DE'SPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]

1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foredone themselves,

And desperately are dead.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

2. In a great degree; violently: this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him, he having withdrawn thither on purpose to avoid her. Addison's Spectator, No. 223.

DE'SPERATENESS. n. f. [from desperate.] Madness; fury; precipitance.

The going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold thus, the more desperate. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

DESPERA'TION. n. f. [from desperate.] Hopelessness; despair; despondency.

Desperation

Is all the policy, strength, and defence,

That Rome can make against them.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we sin on, because we have sinned. Hammond on Fundamentals.

DE'SPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Latin.] Contemptible; vile; mean; sordid; worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight so vile and despicable as mens disdainful speech would make it. Hooker, b. v. f. 23.

Their heads as low

Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears

Of despicable foes.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. 437.

All th' earth he gave thee to possess and rule,

No despicable gift! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 340.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other. Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Addison.

DESPICABLENESS. n. f. [from despicable.] Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.

We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service. Decay of Piety.

DE'SPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.] Meanly; sordidly; vilely.

Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore,

Nor vainly rich, nor despicably poor;

The town in soft solemnities delights,

And gentle poets to her arms invites. Addison on Italy.

DESPISABLE. adj. [from despise.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation.

I am extremely obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old distressed courtier, commonly the most despicable thing in the world. Arbuthnot to Pope.

TO DESPISE. v. a. [despiser, old French, Skinner; despicio, Latin.]

1. To scorn; to condemn; to slight; to disrespect.

For, lo, I will make thee small among the Heathen, and despised among men. Jer. xlix. 15.

My sons their old unhappy sire despise,

Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope's Statius.

2. In Shakespeare it seems once to signify abhor, as from the Italian despettare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,

Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DESPISER. n. f. [from despise.] Contemner; scorner.

Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress?

Or else a rude despiser of good manners,

That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shak. As you like it.

Wisdom is commonly, at long running, justified even of her despisers. Government of the Tongue, f. 7.

Thus the atheists, libertines, and despisers of religion, usually pass under the name of free-thinkers. Swift.

DESPI'TE.

DESPITE. n. f. [spijt, Dutch; dépit, French.]

1. Malice; anger; malignity; maliciousness; spleen; hatred.
Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee! Shak. Coriolanus.
With men these considerations are usually the causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Sprat.
2. Defiance.

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shak. H. VI.
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame;
The one thy duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shak. Rich. II.
Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryd. Fab.
I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryd. Aurengzebe.
Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore's Creation.

Thou, with rebel insolence, did'st dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And in despite, ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Row's Amb. S. Moth.

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.
His punishment, eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milt. Par. Lost.
TO DESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.] To vex; to affront;
to give uneasiness to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night, setting the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh's History.

DESPITEFUL. adj. [despite and ful.] Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant; mischievous: used both of persons and things.

His taken labours bid him me forgive;
I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakes.
Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Mean while the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known
In heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 1.

DESPITEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.] Maliciously; ma-lignantly.

It requires us to pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us. Matthew v. 44.

DESPITEFULNESS. n. f. [from despiteful.] Malice; hate; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisd. ii. 19.

DESPITEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious; furious. A word now out of use.

The knight of the red-cross, when him he spy'd
Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
'Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 2.

TO DESPOIL. v. a. [despolio, Latin.]

1. To rob; to deprive. With of.
Despoil'd of warlike arms, and knownen shield. Spenser.
You are nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life. Shakes. Henry VI.

He waits with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or send thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of blifs. Milt. Par. Lost.
He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,
Awaits: this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune
Defends not the sad hour. Phillips.

DESPOILATION. n. f. [from despolio, Latin.] The act of despoiling or stripping.

TO DESPOIND. v. a. [despondeo, Latin.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.
It is every man's duty to labour in his calling, and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange, Fab. 110.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and despond- ing weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven with trust and resignation. L'Estrange.

Besides, to change their pasture 'tis in vain,
Or trust to physick: physick is their bane:
The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryd. Virgil.
Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind. Watts's Improvement.

DESPOINDENCY. n. f. [from despondent.] Despair; hopelessness;
desperation.

DESPOINDENT. adj. [despondens, Latin.] Despairing; hopeless;
without hope.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, fit

On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock. Thomson's Autumn.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surpris'd with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world. Bentley's Sermons.

TO DESPOINSATE. v. a. [desponsa, Latin.] To betroth; to affiance; to unite by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DESPONSATION. n. f. [from desponsate.] The betrothing persons to each other.

DESPOT. n. f. [δεσπότης] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince; as, the despot of Servia.

DESPOITICAL. adj. [from despot.] Absolute in power; unli-
DESPO'TICK. adj. [from despot.] Limited in authority; arbitrary; unaccountable.
God's universal law

Gave to the man despotick power

Over his female in due awe,

Nor from that right to part an hour,

Smile she or lowre.

Milton's Agonistes.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power; it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coactive and despotical. South's Sermons.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotick prince, in a state that is most of it composed of rocks and mountains; for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swifs and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison on Italy.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who, stirred up with the harangues of their orators, were now wholly bent upon single and despotick slavery. Swift.

DESPO'TICALNESS. n. f. [from despotical.] Absolute authority.

DE'SPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, French, from despot.] Absolute power.

TO DESPUMATE. v. n. [despumo, Latin.] To throw off parts in foam; to froth; to work.

DESPUMATION. n. f. [from despumate.] The act of throwing off excrementitious parts in scum or foam.

DESQUAMATION. n. f. [from squama, Latin.] The act of scaling foul bones.

DESSE'RT. n. f. [desserte, French.] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art

To make a supper with a fine dessert. Dryden's Persius.

At your dessert bright pewter comes too late,

When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

TO DESTINATE. v. a. [destino, Latin.] To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Ray on the Creation.

DESTINATION. n. f. [from destinate.] The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, wherein other spirits are a journeying, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way. Glanv. Sceps.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO DESTINE. v. a. [destino, Latin.]

1. To doom; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?

Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,

Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe:

Whatever doing, what can we suffer more? Milt. Pa. Lost.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,

Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice. Dryden's Æneis.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destined to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or misery.
May heav'n around this destin'd head
The choicest of its curses shed. Prior.
4. To fix unalterably.
The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r,
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour. Prior.

DE'STINY. n. f. [destinée, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate of living beings.
Thou art neither like thy fire or dam;
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shakesf. Henry VI.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.
He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is ty'd to Jove's eternal seat? Fairy Queen, b. i.
How can hearts, not free, be try'd whether they serve Willing or no, who will but what they must
By destiny, and can no other chuse? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
To know, as well as pow'r to act her will. Denham.
Chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be. Dryden's Fab.

3. Doom; condition in future time.
At the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' th' morning: thither he Will come to know his destiny. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DE'STITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Latin.]

1. Forfaken; abandoned.
To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.
He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. Psal. cii. 17.

2. In want of.
Living turfs upon his body lay;
This done, securely take the destin'd way
To find the regions destitute of day. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

DESTITUTION. n. f. [from destitute.] Want; the state in which something is wanted.

That destitution in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, 'till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker, b. v.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in destitution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To DESTROY. v. a. [destruo, Latin; destruire, French.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a building; to ruin.
The lord will destroy this city. Gen. xix. 14.

2. To lay waste; to make desolate.
Solyman sent a great part of his army out of the main unto the island, which burnt and destroyed the country villages. Knolles's History of the Turks.

3. To kill.
A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead. Deutr. ii. 21.

- 'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakesf. Macbeth.
The wise providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.
Do we not see that slothful, intemperate and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.
There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYER. n. f. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

In all the translations it is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh's History of the World.

For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!

Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men. Milt. P. Lost.
Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives. Pope.

DESTRU'CTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Latin.] Liab'e to destruction.

DESTRUCTIB'LITY. n. f. [from destruibile.] Liableness to destruction.

DESTRU'CTION. n. f. [destruatio, Latin.]

1. The act of destroying; waste.
2. Murder; massacre.
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakesf. Macbeth.
If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction. Shakesf. Richard III.
When that which we immortal thought,
We saw so near destruction brought,
We felt what you did then endure,
And tremble yet, as not secure. Waller.

3. The state of being destroyed; ruin.
4. The cause of destruction; a destroyer; a depopulator: as a consuming plague.

The destruction that wasteth at noon-day. Pf. xci. 6.

5. [In theology.] Eternal death.
Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. Matth. vii. 13.

DESTRU'CTIVE. adj. [destruivus, low Latin.]

1. That which destroys; wasteful; causing ruin and devastation; that which brings to destruction.

In ports and roads remote,
Destructive fires among whole fleets we send. Dryden.
One may think, by the name duration, that the continuation of existence, with a kind of resistance to any destructive force, is the continuation of solidity. Locke.

2. With of.
He will put an end to so absurd a practice, which makes our most refined diversions destructive of all politeness. Addisf.
Both are defects equally destructive of true religion. Rogers.

3. With to.
In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish which is of a perishable kind, destructive to the strength. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.
Excess of cold, as well as heat, pains us; because it is equally destructive to that temper which is necessary to the preservation of life. Locke.

DESTRU'CTIVELY. adv. [from destructive.] Ruinously; mischievously; with power to destroy.

What remains to him that ponders this epidemick folly, but to breathe out Moses's wish? O that men were not so destructively foolish. Decay of Piety.

DESTRU'CTIVENESS. n. f. [from destructive.] The quality of destroying or ruining.

The vice of professors exceeds the destructiveness of the most hostile assaults, as intestine treachery is more ruinous than foreign violence. Decay of Piety.

DESTRU'CTOR. n. f. [from destroy.] Destroyer; consumer.

Helmont wittily calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDA'TION. n. f. [desudatio, Latin.] A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DESU'ETUDE. n. f. [desuetudo, Latin.] Cessation to be accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.

We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant. Government of the Tongue.

DESU'LATORY. } adj. [desultorius, Lat.] Roving from thing

DESULTORIOUS. } to thing; unsettled; immethodical; un-constant.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to attone for a lewd course of life, nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vitious one, to qualify an effectual conversion. L'Estrange.

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultorious fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game. Norris.

Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art. Felton on the Classics.

To DESU'ME. v. a. [desumo, Latin.] To take from any thing; to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter. Hale.

They have left us relations suitable to those of Ælian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations. Brown's Vul. Err.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse, though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries. Hale's Law of England.

DET

To DETA'CH. v. a. [détacher, French.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.
The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it détaches from the uppermost stratum.

Woodward's Natural History, p. iii.

The several parts of it are détached one from the other, and yet join again one cannot tell how.

Pope.

2. To send out part of a greater body of men on an expedition.

If ten men are in war with forty, and the latter détach only an equal number to the engagement, what benefit do they receive from their superiority? Addison on the State of the War.

DETA'CHMENT. n. f. [from détach.] A body of troops sent out from the main army.

The Czar dispatched instructions to send out détachments of his cavalry, to prevent the king of Sweden's joining his army.

Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 55.

Besides materials, which are brute and blind,

Did not this work require a knowing mind?

Who for the task should fit détachments chuse

From all the atoms.

Blackmore's Creation.

To DETA'IL. v. a. [détailler, French.] To relate particularly; to particularise; to display minutely and distinctly.

They will perceive the ground of the mistakes of these philosophers, and be able to answer their arguments, without my being obliged to détail them.

Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

DETA'IL. n. f. [détail, French.] A minute and particular account.

I chuse, rather than trouble the reader with a détail here, to defer them to their proper place.

Woodward's Natural History.

I was unable to treat this part of my subject more in détail, without becoming dry and tedious.

Pope.

To DETA'IN. v. a. [detinere, Latin.]

1. To keep that which belongs to another.

Detain not the wages of the hireling; for every degree of detention of it, beyond the time, is injustice and uncharitableness

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. To withhold; to keep back.

These doings detain him

So venomously, that burning shame detains him

From his Cordelia.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

He has described the passion of Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his country.

Broom.

3. To restrain from departure.

Let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid.

Judg. xiii. 15.

Had Orpheus sung it in the nether sphere,

So much the hymn had pleas'd the tyrant's ear,

The wife had been detain'd to keep her husband there.

Dry.

4. To hold in custody.

DETA'INDER. n. f. [from detain.] The name of a writ for holding one in custody.

DETA'INER. n. f. [from detain.] He that holds back any one's right; he that detains any thing.

By proportion to these rules, we may judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons; the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, and cheaters of mens inheritances.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To DETE'CT. v. a. [detectus, Latin.] To discover; to find out any crime or artifice.

There's no true lover in the forest, else sighing every minute and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Though should I hold my peace, yet thou

Would'st easily detect what I conceal.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

DETE'CTER. n. f. [from detect.] A discoverer; one that finds out what another desires to hide.

Oh heavens! that this treason were not; or not I the dete'cter.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Hypocrisy has a secret hatred of its dete'cter; that which will bring it to a test which it cannot pass.

Decay of Piety.

DETE'CTION. n. f. [from detect.]

1. Discovery of guilt or fraud, or any other fault.

Should I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity.

Shakespeare.

That is a sign of the true evangelical zeal, and note for the detection of its contrary: it should abound more in the mild and good-natured affection, than in the vehement and wrathful passions.

Sprat's Sermons.

Detection of the incoherence of loose discourses was wholly owing to the syllogistical form.

Locke.

2. Discovery of any thing hidden.

Not only the sea, but rivers and rains also, are instrumental to the detection of amber, and other fossils, by washing away the earth and dirt that before covered and concealed them.

Woodward's Natural History.

DETE'NTION. n. f. [from detain.]

1. The act of keeping what belongs to another.

How goes the world, that I am thus encountred

With clam'rous claims of debt, of broken bonds,

And the detention of long since due debts,

Against my honour?

Shakespeare's Timon.

2. Confinement; restraint.

DET

This worketh by detention of the spirits, and conflagration of the tangible parts.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 341.

To DET'ER. v. a. [deterreo, Latin.] To discourage from any thing; to fright from any thing.

I never yet the tragick strain assay'd,

Deterr'd by thy inimitable maid.

Waller.

Many and potent enemies tempt and deter us from our duty, yet our case is not hard, so long as we have a greater strength on our side.

Tillotson, Sermon 6.

Beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw on deter imitation, than any discourses which can be made to them.

Locke.

The ladies may not be deterred from corresponding with me by this method.

Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 114.

My own face deters me from my glass;

And Kneller only shews what Celia was.

Prior.

DETER'MENT. n. f. [from deter.] Cause of discouragement; that by which one is deterred.

This will not be thought a discouragement unto spirits, which endeavour to advantage nature by art; nor will the ill success of some be made a sufficient determent unto others.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 8.

These are not all the determents that opposed my obeying you.

Boyle.

To DETERGE. v. a. [detergo, Latin.] To cleanse a sore; to purge any part from feculence or obstructions.

Consider the part and habit of body, and add or diminish your simples as you design to deterge or incarn.

Wifeman.

Sea salt preserves bodie, through which it passeth, from corruption, and it detergeth the vessels, and keeps the fluids from putrefaction.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DETERGENT. adj. [from deterge] That which cleanses.

The food ought to be nourishing and detergent.

Arbuthnot.

DETERIORA'TION. n. f. [from deterior, Latin.] The act of making any thing worse; the state of growing worse.

DETERMINABLE. adj. [from determine] That which may be certainly decided.

Whether all plants have seeds were more easily determinable, if we could conclude concerning harts-tongue, ferns, and some others.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 7.

About this matter, which seems so easily determinable by sense, accurate and sober men widely disagree.

Boyle.

To DETERMINATE. v. a. [determiner, French.] To limit; to fix; to determine; to terminate.

The fly-flow hours shall not determinate

The dateless limit of thy dear exile.

Shakesf. Richard II.

DETERMINATE. adj. [determinatus, Latin.]

1. Limited; determined.

Demonstrations in numbers, if they are not more evident and exact than in extension, yet they are more general in their use, and determinate in their application.

Locke.

To make all the planets move about the sun in circular orbs, there must be given to each, by a determinate impulse, those present particular degrees of velocity which they now have, in proportion to their distances from the sun, and to the quantity of the solar matter.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. Established; settled by rule; positive.

Scriptures are read before the time of divine service, and, without either choice or flint, appointed by any determinate order.

Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

3. Decisive; conclusive.

I th' progress of this business,

E're a determinate resolution, he,

I mean the bishop, did require a respite.

Shak. Henry VIII.

4. Fixed; resolute.

Like men disused in a long peace, more determinate to do, than skilful how to do.

Sidney.

5. Resolved.

My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy.

Shakespeare.

DETERMINATELY. adv. [from determinate.]

1. Resolutely; with fixed resolve.

The queen obeyed the king's commandment, full of raging agonies, and determinately bent, that she would seek all loving means to win Zelmane.

Sidney.

Think thus with yourselves, that you have not the making of things true or false; but that the truth and existence of things is already fixed and settled, and that the principles of religion are already either determinately true or false, before you think of them.

Tillotson, Sermon 1.

DETERMINA'TION. n. f. [from determinate.]

1. Absolute direction to a certain end.

When we voluntarily waste much of our lives, that remissness can by no means consist with a constant determination of will or desire to the greatest apparent good.

Locke.

2. The result of deliberation; conclusion formed; resolution taken.

They have acquainted me with their determination, which is indeed to go home, and to trouble you with no more suit.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The proper acts of the intellect are intellection, deliberation, and determination or decision.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It is much disputed by divines, concerning the power of man's will to good and evil in the state of innocence; and, upon very nice and dangerous precipices, stand their determinations on either side. South's Sermons.

Consult thy judgment, affections and inclinations, and make thy determination upon every particular; and be always as suspicious of thyself as possible. Calamy's Sermons.

3. Judicial decision.

He confined the knowledge of governing to justice and lenity, and to the speedy determination of civil and criminal causes. Gulliver's Travels.

DETERMINATIVE. adj. [from determinate.]

1. That which uncontrollably directs to a certain end.

That individual action which is justly punished as sinful in us, cannot proceed from the special influence and determinative power of a just cause. Bramb. against Hobbs.

2. That which makes a limitation.

If the term added to make up the complex subject does not necessarily or constantly belong to it, then it is determinative, and limits the subject to a particular part of its extension; as, every pious man shall be happy. Watts's Logick.

DETERMINATOR. n. f. [from determinate.] One who determines.

Hereunto they have recourse as unto the oracles of life, unto the great determinator of virginity, conceptions, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown.

To DETERMINE. v. a. [determiner, Fr. determino, Latin.]

1. To fix; to settle.

It is concluded he shall be protector.

—It is determin'd, not concluded yet;

But so it must be, if the king miscarry. Shakesp. Richard III.

More particularly to determine the proper season for grammar, I do not see how it can be made a study, but as an introduction to rhetoric. Locke.

2. To conclude; to fix ultimately.

Probability, in the nature of it, supposes that a thing may, or may not be so, for any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determined on the other side. South's Sermons.

Milton's subject was still greater than either of the former: it does not determine the fate of single persons or nations, but of a whole species. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 267.

Destruition hangs on every word we speak,

On every thought, 'till the concluding stroke

Determines all, and closes our design. Addison's Cato.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of men hitherto hath been determined by the view or sight; so that whatsoever is invisible, either in respect of the fineness of the body itself, or the smallness of the parts, or of the subtilty of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 98.

No sooner have they climbed that hill, which thus determines their view at a distance, but a new prospect is opened. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. To adjust; to limit.

The principium individuationis is existence itself, which determines a being of any sort to a particular time and place, incommunicable to two beings of the same kind. Locke.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another, which is really distinguishing. Locke.

5. To direct to any certain point.

6. To influence the choice.

You have the captives,

Who were the opposites of this day's strife:

We do require them of you, so to use them

As we shall find their merits and our safety

May equally determine.

A man may suspend the act of his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, 'till he has examined it. Locke.

As soon as the studious man's hunger and thirst makes him uneasy, he, whose will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, is, by the uneasiness of hunger and thirst, presently determined to eating and drinking. Locke.

7. To resolve.

Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David. 1 Sa. xx. 33.

8. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies so exist, that the motion of one cannot be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

9. To put an end to; to destroy.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long

'Till sickness hath determin'd me? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

To DETERMINE. v. n.

1. To conclude; to form a final conclusion.

Eve! now expect great tidings, which perhaps

Of us will soon determine, or impose

New laws to be observ'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

2. To end; to come to an end.

They were apprehended, and after conviction the danger determined by their deaths. Hayward.

All pleasure springing from a gratified passion, as most of the pleasure of sin does, must needs determine with that passion. South's Sermons.

3. To come to a decision.

She soon shall know of us,

How honourably and how kindly we Determine for her.

Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

4. To end consequentially.

Revolutions of state, many times, make way for new institutions and forms; and often determine in either setting up some tyranny at home, or bringing in some conquest from abroad. Temple.

5. To resolve concerning any thing.

Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met

Is to determine of the coronation.

Shakesp. Richard III.

DETERRA'TION. n. f. [de and terra, Latin; deterrer, French.]

Discovery of any thing by removal of the earth that hides it; the act of unburying.

This concerns the raising of new mountains; deterrations or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys, from the hills and higher grounds. Woodward's Natural History.

DETERSION. n. f. [from detergo, Latin.] The act of cleansing a fore.

I endeavoured deterfion; but the matter could not be discharged.

Wifeman's Surgery.

DETERSIVE. adj. [from deterge.] Having the power to cleanse.

DETERSIVE. n. f. An application that has the power of cleansing wounds.

We frequently see simple ulcers afflicted with sharp humours, which corrode them, and render them painful fordid ulcers, if not timely relieved by deterfives and lenients. Wifeman.

To DETEST. v. a. [detester, Latin.] To hate; to abhor;

to abominate.

Nigh thereto the ever-damned beast

Durst not approach; for he was deadly made,

And all that life preserved did detest. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 12.

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,

When for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,

We bend to that the working of the heart. Shakespeare.

Since Cleopatra died,

I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods

Detest my baseness.

Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

There is that naturally in the heart of man which abhors sin as sin, and consequently would make him detest it both in himself and others too. South's Sermons.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,

My heart detests him as the gates of hell.

Pope.

DETESTABLE. adj. [from detest.] Hateful; abhorred; abominable; odious.

Beguil'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spighted, slain!

Most detestable death.

Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

He desired him, and the residue of the Scottish nobility, to consider that both armies consisted of Christians, to whom nothing is more detestable than effusion of human blood. Hayw.

DETESTABLY. adv. [from detestable.] Hatefully; abominably; odiously.

It stands here stigmatized by the apostle as a temper of mind, rendering man so detestably bad, that the great enemy of mankind, the devil himself, neither can nor desires to make them worse. South's Sermons.

DETESTA'TION. n. f. [from detest.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; abomination.

Then only did misfortune make her see what she had done, especially finding in us rather detestation than pity. Sidney, b. ii.

2. It is sometimes used with for; but of seems more proper.

The detestation you can express

For vice in all its glittering dress.

Swift.

Our love of God will inspire us with a detestation for sin, as what is of all things most contrary to his divine nature. Swift.

DETESTER. n. f. [from detest.] One that hates or abhors.

To DETHRO'NE. v. a. [destroner, Fr. de and thronus, Latin.]

To devert of regality; to throw down from the throne; to deprive of regal dignity.

DETINUE. n. f. [detenue, French.] A writ that lies against him, who, having goods or chattels delivered him to keep, refuses to deliver them again. Cowel.

DETONA'TION. n. f. [detono, Latin.] Somewhat more forcible than the ordinary crackling of salts in calcination; as in the going off of the pulvis or aurum fulminans, or the like. It is also used for that noise which happens upon the mixture of fluids that ferment with violence; as oil of turpentine with oil of vitriol, resembling the explosion of gunpowder. Quincy.

A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, 'till the detonation occasioned by the former be either quite or almost altogether ended; unless it chance that the puffing matter do blow the coal too soon out of the crucible. Boyle on Saltpetre.

To DETONIZE. v. a. [from detono, Latin.] To calcine with detonation. A chemical term.

DET

Nineteen parts in twenty of detonized nitre is destroyed in eighteen days. Arbutnot on Air.

To DETO'RT. v. a. [detortus, of detorqueo, Latin.] To wrest from the original import, meaning, or design.

They have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit, and have detorted texts of scripture to the sedition, disturbance, and destruction of the civil government.

Dryden's Preface to Rel. Laici.

To DETRA'CT. v. a. [detraclum, Latin; detracler, French.] To derogate; to take away by envy and calumny, or otherwise, any thing from the reputation of another.

Those were assistants in private, but not trusted to manage the affairs in public; for that would detracl from the honour of the principal ambassador. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

No envy can detracl from this: it will shine in history, and, like swans, grow whiter the longer it endures. Dryden.

DETRA'CTER. n. f. [from detracl.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another injuriously.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied by you, in that I have often heard it questioned, and yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detraclers with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

Whether we are so intirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government as you may imagine, their detraclers make a question. Swift.

Away the fair detraclers went,

And gave by turns their censures vent.

Swift.

DETRA'CTION. n. f. [detraclio, Latin; detraclion, French.]

Detraclion, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detraclion, though pursued by various means. Ayliffe.

Even now

I put myself to thy direction, and

Unspeak mine own detraclion; here abjure

The taints and blames I laid upon myself,

For strangers to my nature.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fame, that her high birth to raise,

Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,

We may justly now accuse

Of detraclion from her praise.

Milton.

If detraclion could invite us, discretion surely would contain us from any derogatory intention. Brown.

To put a stop to the insults and detraclions of vain men, I resolved to enter a little farther into the examination.

Woodward's Natural History.

To consider an author farther, as the subject of obloquy and detraclion, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 40.

DETRA'CTORY. adj. [from detracl.] Defamatory by denial of desert; derogatory. Sometimes with to, properly from.

This is not only derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath proposed the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himself, but also detraclory unto the intellect and sense of man, exprestly disposed for that inquisition. Brown.

In mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expressions I find less detraclory from a theme above our praises. Boyle.

The detraclory lye takes from a great man the reputation that justly belongs to him. Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

DETRA'CTRESS. n. f. [from detracl.] A censorious woman.

If any shall detracl from a lady's character, unless she be absent, the said detraclresses shall be forthwith ordered to the lowest place of the room. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 23.

DE'TRIMENT. n. f. [detrimentum, Latin.] Loss; damage; mischief; diminution; harm.

Difficult it must needs have been for one Christian church to abolish that which all had received and held for the space of many ages, and that without any detriment unto religion.

Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

I can repair

That detriment, if such it be, to lose

Self-lost.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 152.

If your joint pow'r prevail, th' affairs of hell

No detriment need fear: go, and be strong. Milton's P. Lost.

There often falls out so many things to be done on the sudden, that some of them must of necessity be neglected for that whole year, which is the greatest detriment to this whole mystery. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Let a family burn but a candle a night less than the usual number, and they may take in the Spectator without detriment to their private affairs. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 486.

DETRIMENTAL. adj. [from detriment.] Mischievous; harmful; causing loss.

Among all honorary rewards, which are neither dangerous nor detrimental to the donor, I remember none so remarkable as the titles which are bestowed by the emperor of China: these are never given to any subject till the subject is dead. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 96.

DEV

Obstinacy in prejudices, which are detrimental to our country, ought not to be mistaken for virtuous resolution and firmness of mind. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 25.

DETRI'TION. n. f. [detero, detritus, Latin.] The act of wearing away. Dict.

To DETRU'DE. v. a. [detrudo, Latin.] To thrust down; To force into a lower place.

Such as are detruded down to hell,

Either, for shame, they still themselves retire;

Or, ty'd in chains, they in close prison dwell.

Davies.

Philosophers are of opinion, that the souls of men may, for their miscarriages, be detruded into the bodies of beasts. Locke.

At thy command the vernal sun awakes

The torpid sap, detruded to the root

By wintry winds.

Thomson's Spring.

To DETRU'NCATE. v. a. [detrunco, Latin.] To lop; to cut; to shorten by deprivation of parts.

DETRUNCA'TION. n. f. [from detrunco.] The act of lopping or cutting.

DETRU'SION. n. f. [from detrusio, Latin.] The act of thrusting or forcing down.

From this detrusion of the waters towards the side, the parts towards the pole must be much increased. Keil against Burnet.

DETURBA'TION. n. f. [deturbo, Latin.] The act of throwing down; degradation. Dict.

DEVASTA'TION. n. f. [devasto, Latin.] Waste; havock; desolation; destruction.

By devastation the rough warrior gains,

And farmers fatten most when famine reigns.

Garth.

That flood which overflowed Attica in the days of Ogyges, and that which drowned Thessaly in Deucalion's Time, made cruel havock and devastation among them. Woodward.

DEUCE. n. f. [deux, French.] 1. Two: A word used in games.

You are a gentleman and a gamester; then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of deuce ace amounts to. Shak.

2. The devil. See DEUSE.

To DEVE'LOP. v. a. [develop, French.] To disengage from something that enfolds and conceals; to disentangle; to clear from its covering.

Take him to develop, if you can,

And hew the block off, and get out the man.

Dunciad.

DEVE'RGENCE. n. f. [devergentia, Latin.] Declivity; declination. Dict.

To DEVE'ST. v. a. [devest, French; de and vestis, Latin.]

1. To strip; to deprive of cloaths.

Then of his arms Androgeus he devests,

His sword, his shield he takes, and plumed crests. Denham.

2. To strip; to take away any thing good.

What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit and devest all right and title in a nation to government? Bacon.

3. To free from any thing bad.

Come on, thou little inmate of this breast,

Which for thy sake from passions I devest.

Prior.

DEVE'X. adj. [devevus, Latin.] Bending down; declivous; incurvated downwards.

DEVE'XITY. n. f. [from devex.] Incurvation downwards; declivity.

To DE'VIATE. v. n. [de via decedere, Latin.]

1. To wander from the right or common way.

The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,

But Shadwell never deviates into sense.

Dryden.

Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,

May boldly deviate from the common track.

Pope.

What makes all physical and moral ill?

There nature deviates, and here wanders will. Pope's Essays.

Besides places which may deviate from the sense of the author, it would be kind to observe any deficiencies in the diction. Pope.

2. To go astray; to err; to sin; to offend.

DEVIA'TION. n. f. [from deviate.]

1. The act of quitting the right way; error; wandering.

These bodies persevere in their motions, and constantly move round in the same tracts, without making the least deviation. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

2. Variation from established rule.

Having once surveyed the true and proper natural alphabet, we may easily discover the deviations from it in the character thereof, in all the alphabets in use, either by defect of single characters, of letters, or by confusion of them. Holder.

3. Offence; obliquity of conduct.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground, that they may not bring error into habit. Clarissa.

DEVI'CE. n. f. [devise, French; divisa, Italian.]

1. A contrivance; a stratagem.

His waving streamers to the winds displays,
And vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryd.

3. An act of external worship.

Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion. Hooker.

For as I passed by and beheld your devotion, I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God. Acts xvii. 23.

In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotions he to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.

An aged holy man,
That day and night said his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Your devotion has its opportunity: we must pray always, but chiefly at certain times. Sprat's Sermons.

5. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependance upon God.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 514.
From the full choir, when loud Hosanna's rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid' that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n. Pope.

DEV

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises. Law on Christ's Perfection.

6. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.

Whither away so fast?

—No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess;

Upon the like devotion as yourselves,

To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakesp. Richard III.

7. Strong affection; ardent love; such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.

Be opposite, all planets of good luck;

To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,

Immaculate devotion; holy thoughts,

I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter. Shak. R. III.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king; and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education. Clar.

8. Disposal; power; state of dependance on any one.

Arundel-castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion. Clarendon, b. viii.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He seemed in swiftness to devour the way. Shakespeare.

Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured. South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour

Does some loose remnant of thy life devour. Dryden.

DEVOURER. n. f. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers:

Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey

But me and mine: how happy art thou then,

From these devourers to be banished? Shak. Tit. Andronicus.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence. Decay of Piety.

Store the pond with carp and tench, which do the best together of any fish, all other fish being devourers of their spawn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour. Rogers, Sermon 13.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god;

And, of success secure, return'd to his abode. Dryd. Fables.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark

The ancient fire descends, with all his train:

Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,

Grateful to heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 863.

DEVOUTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and, faint-like,

Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly. Sh. H. VIII.

One of the wise men of the society of Solomon's house, having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face. Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day,

She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray;

Who being here fill'd with grace, yet strove to be

Both where more grace and more capacity

At once is given. Donne.

Think,

DEW

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,
Thou saw'st the wide extended deep

In all its horrors rise! Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 496.

To second causes we seem to trust, without expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first. Atterb.

DEUSE. n. f. [more properly than deuce, Junius, from Dufius, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;

Well, the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it. Congreve.

DEUTEROGAMY. n. f. [δεύτερον and γάμος.] A second marriage. Dict.

DEUTERONOMY. n. f. [δεύτερον νόμος.] The second book of the law, being the book of Moses.

DEUTEROSCOPY. n. f. [δεύτερον σκοπέω.] The second intention; the meaning beyond the literal sense.

Not attaining the deuteroscopy, or second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEW. n. f. [deap, Saxon; daaw, Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs, particularly those which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour, consisting of water, and of such mineral matter as it meets with in its passage, and could well bring up along with it; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not dis-cernible, as now it is; because the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air 'till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools and refreshes, after the scorching heat of the foregoing day. Woodward's Natural History.

Never yet one hour in bed

Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,

But with his tim'rous dreams was still awak'd. Shak. R. III.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;

His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

She looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapours con-

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,

And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dear, which on the ground still fell,

And overflowed all the fertile plain,

As it had dew'd been with timely rain. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Be we the med'cine of the sickly weal,

And with him pour we in our country's purge,

Each drop of us.

—Or so much as it needs

To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakesf.

Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears. Shakesf. H. VI.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy

Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,

Without the vent of words, which these he breath'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 373.

Palemon above the rest appears,

In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears. Dryd. Fables.

2. It is not used properly of an action of terrou.

In Gallick blood again

He dews his reeking sword, and strows the ground

With headless ranks. Phillips.

DE'WBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean raspberries, which are also of the bramble kind. Hanmer.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries. Shakespeare.

DEWBESPARENT. part. [dew and besparent.] Sprinkled with
dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks

Had ta'en their supper on the favoury herb

Of knot-grass dewbesparent, and were in fold,

I sat me down to watch upon a bank

With ivy canopied, and interwove

With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

DEX

He, now to prove his late renewed might,
High-brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,

Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,

That to the scull a yawning wound it made. Fairy Queen.

DE'WDROP. n. f. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sun-rise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. Shakespeare.

An host

Innumerable! as the stars of night,

Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun

Impearls! on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r. Milton's Pa. Lost.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on their flow'ry lawns,

When the sky opens, and the morning dawns! Tickell.

DE'WLAP. n. f. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about his shoulders slung,

And from his neck the double dewlap hung. Addis. Ov. Met.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,

In very likeness of a roasted crab;

And when she drinks against her lips I bob,

And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale. Shakespeare.

DE'WLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furnished with dewlaps.

Who would believe, that there were mountaineers

Dewlapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em

Wallets of flesh. Shakespeare's Tempest.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,

While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DE'WWORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in
dew.

For the trout, the dew-worm, which some call the lob-worm, and the brandliny, are the chief. Walton's Angler.

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist

Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each

Plant of the field. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 331.

Where two adverse winds,

Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,

Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine

Roars stormy. Phillips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,

And fair Aurora from her dewy bed

Of aged Tithone, 'gan herself to rear,

With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red. Fairy Queen.

The bee with honied thigh,

That at her flow'ry work doth sing,

And the waters murmuring,

With such consort as they keep,

Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton.

His dewy locks distill'd

Ambrosia. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 56.

His own Præniste sends a chosen band,

With those who plough Saturnia's Gabine land;

Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,

The rocks of Hernicus and dewy fields. Dryden's Æn. b. viii.

used in heraldry.

My mother's blood

Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister

Bounds in my fire's. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Latin.]

1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon's Henry VII.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dex- terity. South's Sermons.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]

1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready; as, a dexterous workman.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner, with which they content themselves. Locke.

DEXTE'ROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.] Expertly; skilfully;
artfully.

The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dex- terously, but by acting the minister. South's Sermons.

But then my study was to cog the dice,

And dexterously to throw the lucky sice. Dryden.

DE'XTRAL.

As for any tunics or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by meer irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels.

DEXTRA'LITY. n. f. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

DIABETES. n. f. [διαβήτης.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

DIABO'LICAL. } adj. [from diabolus, Latin.] Devilish; par-

DIABO'LICK. } taking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,

Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,

Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milt. Par. Lost.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature, and upon the common well-being of mankind?

L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children.

Ray on the Creation.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery.

Atterbury's Sermons.

DIACODIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACOSTICS. n. f. [διακοστικά.] The doctrine of sounds.

DIADEM. n. f. [diadema, Latin.]

1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of Eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,

And purple robe gored with many a wound. Fairy Queen.

A list the cobbler's temples ties,

To keep the hair out of their eyes;

From whence 'tis plain the diadem,

That princes wear, derives from them.

Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,

Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;

Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,

To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton's Par. Lost.

Why should he ravish then that diadem

From your grey temples, which the hand of time

Must shortly plant on his.

Denham's Sophy.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,

And stopt our prince in his triumphant way,

Fled like a mist before this radiant day.

Roscommon.

DIAD'EMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,

Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,

Her priestless muse forbids the good to dye,

And opes the temple of eternity.

Pope.

DIADROM. n. f. [διαδρομή.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of one inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute.

Locke.

DIÆRESIS. n. f. [διαίρεσις.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as a'er.

DIAGNOSTICK. n. f. [διαγνωστικόν.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house:—let us hear your diagnosticks.

Collier on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monstrosity of the badger is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 5.

This, and all like sorts of stone that are composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata.

Woodward on Fossils.

DIA'GONAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts.

VOL. I.

Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished, according unto their activity and predominant locomotion, on the either side.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv.

DI'AGRAM. n. f. [διαγράμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation.

Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles?

Bentley's Sermons.

DIAGRY'DIATES. n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder.

Floyer.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shews the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:

To spend that shortness basely were too long,

Though life did ride upon a dial's point,

Still ending at th' arrival of an hour. Shakefp. Henry IV.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone.

Glanv. Sceps. c. 11.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

He tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of one of these needles, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 241.

DIALECT. n. f. [διὰλεκξις.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.

2. Stile; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting.

Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,

Such as moves men.

Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person, upon whom it was conferred, to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations?

South's Sermons.

DIALECTICAL. adj. [from dialectick.] Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties that the schoolmen too often employ about physiological mysteries, are wont much more to declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth.

Boyle.

DIALECTICK. n. f. [διαλεκτική.] Logick; the act of reasoning.

DIA'LLING. n. f. [from dial.] The sciaterick science; the knowledge of shadow; the act of constructing dials on which the shadow may shew the hour.

DIA'LIST. n. f. [from dial.] A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes.

Moxon.

DIA'LOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DIALOGUE. n. f. [διαλόγιος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckow?

Shakespeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise;

He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise.

Dryden.

To DI'ALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to confer.

Do'st dialogue with thy shadow?

Shakespeare's Timon.

DIALY'SIS. n. f. [διάλυσις.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.

DIAMETER. n. f. [διά and μέτρον.] The line, which passing through the center of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy and Alfraganus, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles.

Raleigh's History of the World.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

DIA'METRAL. adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIA'METRALLY. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to profaneness and impiety of actions. Hammond.

DIAME'TRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves. Government of the Tongue, f. v.

DIAME'TRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security. Clarendon, b. viii.

When it is thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodward.

DIAMOND. n. f. [diamant, French; adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflexions. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fiercest of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass-house fire for many days, and, if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasils; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles. Hill on Fossils.

This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;

But keep it 'till you woo another wife. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;

Or, for the diamond, the chain you promised. Shakespeare.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow. Shak. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty; as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other stone. Woodward's Mett. Foss.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,

Fair as the star that ushers in the morn. Blackm. Creation.

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,

Collected light, compact. Thomson's Summer, l. 140.

DI'APASE. n. f. [διά πασών.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,

Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;

Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,

All which compacted made a good diapase. Fairy Queen.

The sweet numbers and melodious measures,

With which I wont the winged words to tie,

And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,

Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIAPA'SON. n. f. [διά πασών.]

Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with that we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same sound. Bacon's Nat. History.

Harsh din

Broke the fair musick that all creatures made

To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood

In first obedience, and their state of good. Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,

A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Crashaw.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,

This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DI'APER. n. f. [diapre, French, of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most

In skilful knitting of soft filken twine;

Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast

In diaper, in damask, or in lyne,

Might in their diverse cunning ever dare

With this so curious net-work to compare. Spenser.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin

Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;

Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shakespeare.

To DI'APER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,

The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,

And diaper'd like the discoloured mead. Spenser.

Flora useth to cloath our grand-dame earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Howel's Vocal Forrest.

2. To draw flowers upon cloaths.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Peacham on Drawing.

DIAPHANE'ITY. n. f. [from διαφανεια.] Transparency; pellucidity; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity; therefore are the eyelids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Ray on the Creation.

DIAPHA'NICK. adj. [διά and φάνος.] Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtile, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created, easily transpired. Raleigh's History of the World.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [διά and φάνος.] Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent, or clearing to a diaphanous body. Raleigh's History of the World.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray on the Creation.

DIAPHORE'TICK. adj. [διαφορητικός.] Sudorifick; promoting a diaphoresis or perspiration; causing sweat.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digestion, because the attenuation of the aliment make it perspirable. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorifick, is something that will provoke sweating. Watts.

DI'APHRAGM. n. f. [διαφραγμα.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of bodies, round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms, thick set throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward on Fossils.

DIARRHOEA. n. f. [διάρροια.] A flux of the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restraining the bowels. Quincy.

During his diarrhoea I healed up the fontanels. Wiseman.

DIARRHOE'TICK. adj. [from diarrhoea.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solutive; purgative.

Millet is diarrhetick, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DI'ARY. n. f. [diarium, Latin.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observations of every day; a journal.

In sea-voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, they omit it. Bacon, Essay 19.

I go on in my intended diary. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 60.

DIA'STOLE. n. f. [διαστολή.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, by which a short syllable is made long.

2. The dilation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural state. Ray on the Creation.

DIA'STYLE. [διά and στυλος, a pillar.] A sort of edifice where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another, that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for intercolum-niation. Harris.

DIATE'SSERON. n. f. [of διά and τίσσερα, four.] An interval in musick, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semi-tone; its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATO'NICK. [of διατόνος.] The ordinary sort of musick which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending.

descending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semi-tone. Harris.

DIAZENTICK Tone. [of di and zynthu.] In the ancient Greek musick, disjoined two fourths, one on each side of it; and which being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our musick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diazentick tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris.

DIBBLE. n. f. [from dipfel, Dutch, a sharp point, Skinner; from dabbe, Funius.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

DICA'CITY. n. f. [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertness; sauciness. Di.

DIBSTONE. n. f. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise whole hours together, and take abundance of pains to be expert at dibstones, as they call it. Locke.

DICE. n. f. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice: now, after you have cast all the trials but one, it is still as much odds at the last remaining time, as it was at the first. Bentley's Sermons.

TO DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; diced not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter of an hour. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

DICE-BOX. n. f. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box? Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 120.

DICER. n. f. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gamester.

They make marriage vows

As false as dicers oaths.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DICH. adj. This word seems corrupted from dit for do it.

Rich men sin, and I eat root:

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus. Shakesp. Timon.

DICHO'TOMY. n. f. [διχοτομία] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DICKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?

—I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial sum?

But han't you found it, sir?

DICHER of Leather. n. f. [dicra, low Latin.] Ten hides. Di.

TO DICTATE. v. a. [dicto, Latin.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,

And studded amber darts a golden ray;

Such, and not nobler, in the realms above,

My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove. Pope's Odyssey.

Whatsoever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance. Watts's Logick.

DICTATE. n. f. [dictatum, Latin.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; prescript.

Others cast about for new discoveries, and to seek in their own thoughts for those right helps of art which will scarce be found, I fear, by those who servilely confine themselves to the dictates of others. Locke.

I credit what the Grecian dictates say,

And Samian sounds o'er Scotia's hills convey. Prior.

Then let this dictate of my love prevail;

Instant, to foreign realms prepare to fail,

To learn your father's fortunes. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

DICTA'TION. n. f. [from dictate.] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing. Di.

DICTATOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A magistrate of Rome made in times of exigence and distress, and invested with absolute authority.

Kind dictators made, when they came home,

Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome. Waller.

Julius with honour tam'd Rome's foreign foes;

But patriots fell, ere the dictator rose. Prior.

2. One invested with absolute authority.

Unanimous they all commit the care,

And management of this main enterprize,

To him their great dictator. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

3. One whose credit or authority enables him to direct the conduct or opinion of others.

Nor is it a small power it gives one man over another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths. Locke.

That riches, honours, and outward splendour, should set up persons for dictators to all the rest of mankind, is a most shameful invasion of the right of our understanding. Watts.

DICTATORIAL. adj. [from dictator.] Authoritative; confident; dogmatical; overbearing.

A young academick often dwells upon a journal, or an observator that treats of trade and politicks in a dictatorial style, and is lavish in the praise of the author. Watts.

DICTA'TORSHIP. n. f. [from dictator.]

1. The office of dictator.

This is the solemnest title they can confer under the principedom, being indeed a kind of dictatorship. Wotton.

2. Authority; insolent confidence.

This is that perpetual dictatorship which is exercised by Lucretius, though often in the wrong. Dryden.

DICTA'TURE. n. f. [dictatura, Latin.] The office of a dictator; dictatorship. Di.

DIC'TION. n. f. [dictio, French; dictio, Latin.] Stile; language; expression.

There appears in every part of his diction, or expression, a kind of noble and bold purity. Dryden.

DIC'TIONARY. n. f. [dictionarium, Latin.] A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order, with explanations of their meaning; a lexicon; a vocabulary; a word-book.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and left an account that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations; that they are afraid of letters and characters, notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing; and not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 10.

Is it such a horrible fault to translate simulacra images? I see what a good thing it is to have a good catholick dictionary. Still.

An army, or a parliament, is a collection of men; a dictionary, or nomenclature, is a collection of words. Watts.

DID. of do. [dis, Saxon.]

1. The preterite of do.

Thou canst not say I did it.

Shakespeare.

What did that greatness in a woman's mind?

Ill lodg'd and weak to act what it design'd. Dryd. Aurengz.

2. The sign of the preter-imperfect tense, or perfect.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand,

Or rail at arts he did not understand. Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically; as, I did really love him.

DIDA'CTICAL. } adj. [didaktik.] Preceptive; giving precepts:

DIDA'CTICK. } as a didactic poem is a poem that gives rules for some art; as the Georgicks.

The means used to this purpose are partly didactical, and partly protreptical, demonstrating the truth of the gospel; and then urging the professors of those truths to be steadfast in the faith, and to beware of infidelity. Ward on Infidelity.

DIDAPPER. n. f. [from dip.] A bird that dives into the water.

DIDA'SCALICK. adj. [didaskalik.] Preceptive; didactic; giving precepts in some art.

I found it necessary to form some story, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what species it may be comprehended, whether didascalick or heroick, I leave to the judgment of the critics. Prior.

TO DIDDER. v. a. [diddern, Teut. zittern, Germ.] To quake with cold; to shiver. A provincial word. Skinner.

DIDST. The second person of the preter tense of do. See DID.

Oh last and best of Scots! who didst maintain

Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign. Dryden.

TO DIE. v. a. [deag, Saxon, a colour.] To tinge; to colour; to stain.

So much of death her thoughts

Had entertain'd, as dy'd her cheeks with pale. Milt. P. L.

All white, a virgin faint she sought the skies;

For marriage, though it sullies not, it dies. Dryden.

DIE. n. f. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; stain; hue acquired.

It will help me nothing

To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me,

Which makes my whitest part black. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

We have dainty works of feathers of wonderful lustre, excellent dies, and many. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Darkness we see emerges into light,

And shining suns descend to fable night:

Ev'n heav'n itself receives another die,

When weary'd animals in slumbers lie

Of midnight ease; another, when the gray

Of morn preludes the splendor of the day. Dryden's Fables.

It is very surprizing to see the images of the mind stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the die of the passions, and appear in all the colours and complexions of thought. Collier of the Aspect.

First this

She sends on earth; then that of deeper die

Steals soft behind.

Thompson's Summer, l. 1685.

To DIE. v. n. [death, Saxon.]

1. To lose life; to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou dost kill me with thy unkind falsehood; and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murderer.

Sidney.

Nor did the third his conquests long survive,
Dying ere scarce he had begun to live. Addis. Ovid. Metam.

Oh let me live my own, and die so too!

To live and die is all I have to do?

Pope's Epistles.

2. To perish by violence or disease.

The dira only served to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat. Dryden.

Talk not of life or ransom, he replies,

Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies:

In vain a single Trojan sues for grace;

But least the sons of Priam's hateful race:

Die then, my friend! what boots it to deplore!

The great, the good Patroclus is no more!

He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;

And thou, dost thou, bewail mortality. Pope's Hom. Iliad.

3. It has by before an instrument of death.

4. Of before a disease.

They often come into the world clear, and with the appearance of sound bodies; which, notwithstanding, have been infected with disease, and have died of it, or at least have been very infirm.

Wiseman's Surgery.

5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a positive cause.

At first she startles, then she stands amaz'd;

At last with terror she from thence doth fly,

And loaths the wat'ry glass wherein she gaz'd,

And shuns it still, although for thirst she die.

Davies.

He in the laden vineyard dies for thirst.

Addison.

Hipparchus being passionately fond of his own wife, who was enamoured of Bathyllus, leaped and died of his fall. Addis.

6. To be punished with death.

If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved.

Shakesp. King Lear.

What is the love of our neighbour?

—The valuing him as the image of God, one for whom Christ died.

Hammond's Pract. Catech.

7. To be lost; to perish; to come to nothing.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone?

Of sorriest fancies your companion making,

Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

If any sovereignty, on account of his property, had been vested in Adam, which in truth there was not, it would have died with him.

Locke.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in spreading whispers, he will find greater satisfaction by letting the secret die within his own breast.

Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 595.

8. To sink; to faint.

His heart died within him, and he became as a stone. I Sa.

9. [In theology.] To perish everlastingly.

So long as God shall live, so long shall the damned die.

Hakewell on Providence.

10. To languish with pleasure or tenderness.

To sounds of heav'nly harps she dies away,

And melts in visions of eternal day. Pope's Elvi. to Abelard.

11. To vanish.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,

When dying clouds contend with growing light. Sh. H. VI.

The smaller stains and blemishes may die away and disappear, amidst the brightness that surrounds them; but a blot of a deeper nature casts a shade on all the other beauties, and darkens the whole character.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 256.

12. [In the stile of lovers.] To languish with affection.

The young men acknowledged in love-letters, that they died for Rebecca.

Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 110.

13. To wither as a vegetable.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

John xii. 25.

14. To grow vapid, as liquor.

DIE. n. f. pl. dice. [di, French; dis, Welsh.]

1. A small cube, marked on its faces with numbers from one to six, which gamesters throw in play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

I have set my life upon a cast,

And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakesp. Richard III.

He knows which way the lot and the die shall fall, as perfectly as if they were already cast.

South's Sermons.

2. Hazard; chance;

Estfoons his cruel hand Sir Guyon staid,

Temp'ring the passion with advisement slow,

And must'ring might on enemy dismay'd;

For th' equal die of war he well did know.

Fairy Queen.

So both to battle fierce arranged are;

In which his harder fortune was to fall

Under my spear: such is the die of war. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Thine is the adventure, thine the victory:

Well has thy fortune turn'd the die for thee. Dryden's Fables.

3. Any cubick body.

DIE. n. f. plur. dies. The stamp used in coinage.

There have been such variety of dies made use of by Wood in stamping his money, that it makes the discovery of counterfeits more difficult.

Swift.

DI'ER. n. f. [from die.] One who follows the trade of dying; one who dies cloaths.

The fleece, that has been by the dier stain'd,

Never again its native whiteness gain'd.

Waller.

There were some of very low rank and professions, who acquired great estates: cobblers, diers, and shoemakers gave publick shows to the people.

Arbutnot on Coins.

DIET. n. f. [dieta, low Latin; diarua.]

1. Food; provisions for the mouth; victuals.

They cared for no other delicacy of fare, or curiosity of diet, than to maintain life. Raleigh's History of the World.

Time may come, when men

With angels may participate; and find

No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare. Milt. Par. Lost.

No part of diet, in any season, is so healthful, so natural, and so agreeable to the stomach, as good and well-ripened fruits.

Temple.

Milk appears to be a proper diet for human bodies, where acrimony is to be purged or avoided; but not so proper where the canals are obstructed, it being void of all saline quality.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I commend rather some diet for certain seasons, than frequent use of physick; for those diets alter the body more, and trouble it less.

Bacon, Essay 31.

I restrained myself to so regular a diet, as to eat flesh but once a day, and little at a time, without salt or vinegar. Temp.

To DI'ET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.

She diets him with fasting every day,

The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,

And made him pray both early and eke late. Fairy Queen.

Shew a while like fearful war,

To diet rank minds sick of happiness,

And purge th' obstructions, which begin to stop

Our very veins of life. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. iii.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd:

The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then

We powt upon the morning, are unapt

To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd

These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,

With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls

Than in our priestlike fasts; therefore I'll watch him

'Till he be dieted to my request. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,

Diet his sickness; for it is my office. Shakesp. Com. of Err.

Henceforth my early care

Shall 'tend thee, and the fertile burden ease

'Till dieted by thee, I grow mature

In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milt. P. L.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food.

Swift.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,

For that I do suspect the lusty Moor

Hath leapt into my seat.

Shakespeare's Othello.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

To DI'ET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

I join with thee calm peace and quiet;

Spare fast, that oft with gods doth diet.

Milton.

DIET-DRINK. n. f. [diet and drink.] Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The observation will do that better than the lady's diet-drinks, or apothecary's medicines.

Locke.

DI'ET. n. f. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner: from diet, an old German word signifying a multitude, Junius.] An assembly of princes or estates.

An emperor in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or assembly of the estates of many free princes, ecclesiastical and temporal.

Raleigh.

DIETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet.

Diēt.

DI'ETER. n. f. [from diet.] One who prescribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He sauc'd our broth as Juno had been sick,

And he her dieter.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

DIETE'TICAL. } n. f. [diarētētikē.] Relating to diet; belonging

DIETE'TICK. } to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and such as, without a journey to Æsculapius, culinary prescription might have been afforded. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

This book was received by the publick with the respect that was due to the importance of its contents: it became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetick philosophy. Arbuthnot on Aliments, Pref.

To DIFFER. v. n. [différo, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have properties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a diff'ring sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon's Natural History.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, wont discern

What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,

Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addison's Cato.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man that is of judgment and understanding shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon's Essays.

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 19.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment sit;

We'll never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

DIFFERENCE. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker, b. iv.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh's History of the World.

Thus born alike, from virtue first began

The diff'rence that distinguish'd man from man:

He claim'd no title from descent of blood,

But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes, under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Oh the strange difference of man and man!

To thee a woman's services are due;

My fool usurps my body. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practised to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil. Hayward.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?

—It was a contention in publick. Shakesf. Cymbeline.

He is weary of his life that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Sandys.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution, under a good administration, does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 31.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such differences among them, about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillotf.

6. Point in question; ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the difference,

That holds this present question in the court? Shakespeare.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference, and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch the matter. Bacon's Essays.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Davies.

To DIFFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

Most are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs, which are commonly observed, and are differentiated by other concurrent causes. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Grass differentiates a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness. Ray on the Creation.

VOL. I.

We see nothing that differeces the courage of Mnestheus from that of Sergethus. Pope's Essay on Homer.

DIFFERENT. adj. [from diff'er.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and, in the absence of those, which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. Of many contrary qualities.

The Britons change

Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,

And other climes, where diff'rent food and soil

Portend distempers.

Phillips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DIFFERENTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions; about the invention of which there has been a contest between Leibnitz and Sir Isaac Newton. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DIFFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by a person of an ordinary genius. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 409.

DIFFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may remit the light so differingly, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvious. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficil apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glanv. Sceps. c. 4.

Latin was not more difficil,

Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle.

Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficil in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit towards that see, that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bac.

DIFFICILNESS. n. f. [from difficil.] Difficulty to be persuaded; incompliance; impracticability.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or difficilness, or the like; but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief. Bacon's Essays.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not easy; not facil.

It is difficult in the eyes of this people.

Zachar.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

DIFFICULTLY. adv. [from difficult] Hardly; with difficulty.

A man who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficultly be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers's Sermons.

DIFFICULTY. n. f. [from difficult; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention to the discharge of it. Rogers, Sermon. 13.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities: a pernicious mistake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, 'till their convictions do them no good. South's Sermons.

3. Distress; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat:

Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie at present under some difficulties, by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden the importation of their manufactures. Addison on Italy.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

To DIFFIDE. v. n. [diffido, Latin.] To distrust; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear:

The man diffides in his own augury,

And doubts the gods.

Dryden.

DIFFIDENCE.

D I F

DIFFIDENCE. n. f. [from diffide.] Distrust; want of confidence; timidity.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver. Milton's Agonistes.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence, arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence, least possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley's Serm.

DIFFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.] Not confident; not certain; distrustful.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. K. Charles.

Be not diffident

Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou
Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh. Milton.
I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

Pliny speaks of the Seres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbuthnot.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident. Clarissa.

TO DIFFIND. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.] To cleave in two; to split. Dict.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [diffusio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting. Dict.

DIFFLATION. n. f. [difflare, Latin.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind. Dict.

DIFFLUENCE. } n. f. [from diffluo, Latin.] The quality of DIFFLUENCY. } falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form; but rather a consistency or determination of its diffluency, and omitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. i.

DIFFLUENT. adj. [diffluens, Latin.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

DIFFORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular; as a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glass. Newton.

DIFFORMITY. n. f. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present disposure of things, they rest not in their established natures; but desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind, that formed all things best. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. ii.

DIFFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [franchise, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

TO DIFFUSE. v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Wisdom had ordain'd

Good out of evil to create; instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton's Par. Lost.
No sect wants its apostles to propagate and diffuse it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,

Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,
And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden's Good Parson.

DIFFUSE. adj. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

DIFFUSED. participial adj. [from diffuse] This word seems to have signified, in Shakespeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once,

With some diffused song. Shakes. Merry Wives of Windsor.
He grows like savages,

D I G

To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,

And every thing that seems unnatural. Shakesp. Henry V.

DIFFUSEDLY. adv. [from diffused.] Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSEDNESS. n. f. [from diffused.] The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFUSELY. adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural History, No. 269.

A sheet of very well sleeked marbled paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unstained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of stile.

DIFFUSIVE. adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, where-e'er they pass

They make that warmth in others they expect:

Their valour works like bodies on a glass,

And does its image on their men project. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South's Sermons.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,

Exert their heads from underneath the mists,

And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,

And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows;

Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,

And round the happy soil diffusive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended; in full extension.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of Christians. Tillot.

DIFFUSIVELY. adv. [from diffusive.] Widely; extensively; every way.

DIFFUSIVENESS. n. f. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole side of a medal overrun with it. Addison on Ancient Medals.

TO DIG. v. a. preter. dug, or digged; part. pass. dug, or digged. [dic, Saxon, a ditch; dyger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezek. viii. 8.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walks of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Whitgift.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chro. xxvi. 10.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn

The branches lopt. Dryden's Virg. Georg. ii.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A ravenous vulture in his open'd side,

Her crooked beak and cruel talons try'd;

Still for the growing liver digg'd his breast,

The growing liver still supply'd the feast. Dryden's Æn.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the highest mountains, and indeed all other parts of the earth contingently and indifferently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear

Her annual income to the crooked share;

But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,

Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore. Dryd. Ovid.

TO DIG. v. a. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than far hid treasures. Job iii. 21.

They have often dug into lands that are described in old authors, as the places where such particular statues or obelisks stood, and have seldom failed of success in their pursuits. Addison's Travels.

TO DIG UP. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If

D I G

If I digg'd up thy forefather's graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not flake mine ire.

Shak. H. VI.

DI'GERENT. adj. [digerens, Latin.] That which has the power of digesting, or causing digestion.

DIGE'ST. n. f. [digesta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompilement of the laws of mine own nation.

Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade.

Arbutnot on Coins.

TO DIGE'ST. v. a. [digero, digestum, Latin.]

1. To distribute into various classes or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Each then has organs to digest his food;

One to beget, and one receive the brood.

Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghil: a chemical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

A few chosen friends, who sometimes deign

To bless my humble roof, with sense refin'd,

Learning digested well.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play

Leaps o'er the vaunt and firtilings of those broils,

'Ginning i' th' middle: starting thence away,

To what may be digested in a play. Shakesf. Troil. and Cressid.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

First, let us go to dinner.

—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.

—No, pray thee, let it serve for table talk;

Then howsoe'er thou speak'st, 'mong other things

I shall digest it.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The pleasure of numbers, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility. Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwal and Albany,

With my two daughters dowers, digest the third. Shakesf.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound; to generate pus in order to a cure.

TO DIGE'ST. v. n. To generate matter as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGE'STER. n. f. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state.

Quincy.

3. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digest.

Temple.

DIGE'STIBLE. adj. [from digest.] That which is capable of being digested or concocted in the stomach.

Those medicines that purge by stool enter not into the mesentery veins; but are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.

DIGE'STION. n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,

And health on both.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation; heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion.

Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion.

South's Sermons.

2. The preparation of matter by a chemical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 327.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,

Raise all the labour-houses of the air,

And lay crude vapours in digestion there.

Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodising; the maturation of a scheme.

D I G

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men.

Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

DIGE'STIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chylifactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very same state; the one active, piercing, and digestive by its heat; the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Considering; methodising.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,

This future rule is into method brought.

Dryden.

DIGE'STIVE. n. f. [from digest.] An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives.

Wifeman of Abscesses.

DI'GGER. n. f. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles.

Boyle.

TO DIGHT. v. a. [bihtan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.]

To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,

Which maketh him invisible to fight.

Hubberd's Tale.

Let my due feet never fail

To walk the studious cloisters pale,

And love the high embowed roof,

With antick pillar massy proof,

And storied windows richly dight,

Casting a dim religious light.

Milton.

Just so the proud insulting last

Array'd and dighted Hudibras,

Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

DI'GIT. n. f. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quicksilver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere.

Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten.

Not only the number seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by most, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded.

Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DI'GATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into divisions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multifidous, or such as are digitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DI'GLADIA'TION. n. f. [digladiatio, Latin.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity.

Glanv. Sceps. c. 19.

DI'GNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICA'TION. n. f. [from dignify.]

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person.

Walton's Angler.

TO DI'GNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre.

Such a day,

So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,

Came not 'till now to dignify the times,

Since Cæsar's fortunes!

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,

But your worth will dignify our feast. Ben. Johnson's Epigr.

No turbot's dignify my boards;

But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

DI'GNITARY. n. f. [from dignas, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity; to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit.

Swift.

DI'GNITY. n. f. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hooker, b. ii. f. 6.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.

4. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakesf. Henry VI.
For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them,

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles; αρχαὶ δοξαί.

The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare and peremptory asseverations.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 7.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNO'TION. n. f. [from dignoseo, Lat.] Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.

TO DIGRE'SS v. n. [digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth, to digress no farther, that the Tartarians; spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate.

I am come to keep my word,

Though in some part am forced to digress,

Which at more leisure I will so excuse

As you shall well be satisfied. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,

Digressing from the valour of a man. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

DIGRE'SSION. n. f. [digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney, b. i.

He, she knew, would intermix

Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute

With conjugal caresses. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Here some digression I must make, t' accuse

Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse. Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryd. Dufresne.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but near the equinoctial interfections, it is right and greater; near the solstices, more oblique and lesser. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 4.

DIJUDICA'TION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. f. [dic, Saxon; dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound

The rising rivers float the nether ground. Dryd. Virg. Geo.

The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud

With deeper fable blots the silver flood. Pope's Dunciad.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it. Cowley's Davids.

TO DILACERATE. v. a. [dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 6.

DILACERA'TION. n. f. [from dilaceratio, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres.

Arbutnot on Diet.

TO DILA'NIATE. v. a. [dilanio, Latin.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind. Howel's Engl. Tears.

TO DILAPIDATE. v. a. [dilapido, Latin.] To ruin; to throw down.

DILAPIDA'TION. n. f. [dilapidatio, Latin.] The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any wilful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DILATABI'LITY. n. f. [from dilatable.] The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray on the Creation.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion. Arbutnot.

DILA'TABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, dilatable and contractable, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot on Aliment.

DILATA'TION. n. f. [from dilatatio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending into greater space.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Holder.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts, which maketh them more lively and stirring. Bacon's Natural History.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton's Opt. Experim.

TO DILA'TE. v. a. [dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,

Than had ye sort'd with a prince's peer;

For now your light doth more itself dilate,

And in my darkness greater doth appear. Spenser.

Satan alarm'd,

Collecting all his might, dilated stood,

Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Opener of mine eyes,

Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart,

And growing up to godhead: which for thee

Chiefly I fought; without thee, can despise. Milt. Pa. Lost.

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate

Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;

Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Prior.

I mark the various fury of the winds;

These neither seasons guide, nor order binds:

They now dilate, and now contract their force;

Various their speed, but endless is their course. Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton's Opt.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theam

For to dilate at large; but urged fore,

With piercing words, and pitiful implore,

Him hasty to arise. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5. Stan. 37.

I observing,

Took once a pliant hour, and found good means

To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,

That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,

Whereof by parcels she had something heard,

But not distinctively. Shakespeare's Othello.

TO DILA'TE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

His heart dilates and glories in his strength. Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publickly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech. Clarendon.

DILA'TOR. n. f. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinatores, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in cholerick people. Arb.

DILA'TORINESS. n. f. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DILA'IORY. adj. [dilatatoire, French; dilatorius, Lat.]. Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees?

Thou

D I L

Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakespeare's Othello.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome. Shak. Henry VIII.

Dilat ry fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves Otway's Orph.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 469.

DILECTION. n. f. [dilectio, Latin.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle's Seraph. Love.

DILEMMA. n. f. [δύλημμα.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions.
A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judges will award it.

A *di*emma, that bishop Morton the chancellor used, to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crutch.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound. Cowley.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desp'rate case!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.
A dire dilemma; either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead. Pope.

DILIGENCE. n. f. [diligentia, Latin.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Pet. i. 10.

DILIGENT. adj. [diligens, Latin.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.
Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings. Prov. xxii. 29.
2. Constantly applied; prosecuted with activity and perseverance; assiduous.

And the judges shall make diligent inquisition. Deutr. xix.

DILIGENTLY. adv. [from diligent.] With assiduity; with heed and perseverance; not carelessly; not idly; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you shall never be able to discern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what consists the beauty of good postures. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DILL. n. f. [bile, Saxon.]

It hath a slender, fibrose, annual root: the leaves are like those of fennel; the seeds are oval, plain, streaked, and bordered.

Dill is raised of seed, which is ripe in August. Mortimer.

DILUCID. adj. [dilucidus, Latin.]

1. Clear; plain; not opaque.
2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Latin.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not traduce or extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Vu. Err. Pr.

DILUCIDATION. n. f. [from dilucidatio.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUENT. adj. [diluens, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To DILUTE. v. a. [diluo, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.
Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed. Locke.
The aliment ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. To make weak.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater.

Newton's Opt. Pro. i. Th. 1.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newt.

VOL. I.

D I M

DILUTER. n. f. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUTION. n. f. [dilutio, Lat.] The act of making any thing thin or weak

Opposite to dilution is coagulation, or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUVIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Lat.] Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

DIM. adj. dimme, Saxon; dy, Welsh; dow, Erse.]

1. Not having a quick sight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form, how can my spark discern,
Which, dim by nature, art did never clear? Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Rogers's Sermons.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being. Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view,

Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do. Pope, Epist. i.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wond'rous fair did seem to be,
That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw
Through the dim shade, that all men might it see. Pai. Qu.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,
It dims the dazed eyes, and daunts the senses quite. Fa. Qu.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted. Bacon's N. Hist.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight? Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head,

With all such reading as was never read. Pope's Dunciad.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide,
By conduct of some star doth make her way,
When as a storm hath dimmed her trusty guide,
Out of her course doth wander far astray. Spenser.

Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star;

But none can help our harms by wailing them. Shak. R. III.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimmed his face,

Thrice chang'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 1114.

DIMENSION. n. f. [dimensio, Latin.] Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

He try'd

The tomb, and found the strait dimensions wide. Dryden.

My gentleman was measuring my walls, and taking the dimensions of the room. Swift.

DIMENSIONLESS. adj. [from dimension.] Without any definite bulk.

In they pass'd

Dimensionless through heav'nly doors. Milton's Paradise Lost.

DIMENSIVE. adj. [dimensus, Latin.] That which marks the boundaries or outlines.

All bodies have their measure, and their space;

But who can draw the soul's dimensive lines? Davies.

DIMICATION. n. f. [dimicatio, Latin.] A battle; the act of fighting; contest. Dict.

DIMIDIATION. n. f. [dimidiatio, Latin.] The act of halving; division into two equal parts. Dict.

To DIMINISH. v. a. [diminuo, Latin.]

1. To make less by abscission or destruction of any part: the opposite to increase.

That we call good which is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us. Locke.

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought

Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw

The number of thy worshippers. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To take any thing from that to which it belongs: the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the imprisonment of the duke. Hayward.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it. Deut. iv. 2.

To DIMINISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had increases rather than diminishes; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;

Before the Boreal blasts the vessels fly. Pope's Odyssey.

DIMINISHINGLY. adv. [from diminish.] In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.

I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. Locke.

DIMINUTION. n. f. [diminutio, Latin.]

1. The act of making less; opposed to augmentation.

The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker, b. iii.

2. The state of growing less; opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton's Opt.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee

Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;

Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd

In military honour next.

Phillips.

They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 256.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wise by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles.

5. [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.

DIMINUTIVE. adj. [diminutivus, Latin.] Small; little; narrow; contracted.

The poor wren,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,

Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shak. Macbeth.

It is the interest of mankind, in order to the advance of knowledge, to be sensible they have yet attained it but in poor and diminutive measure. Glanv. Scept. Preface.

The light of man's understanding is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present. South.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addis. Guardian.

They know how weak and awkward many of those little diminutive discourses are. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

DIMINUTIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A word formed to express littleness; as lapillus, in Latin, a little stone; maisonette, in French, a little house; manniken, in English, a little man.

He afterwards proving a dainty and effeminate youth, was commonly called, by the diminutive of his name, Peterkin or Perkin. Bacon's Henry VII.

Sim, while but Sim, in good repute did live;

Was then a knave, but in diminutive.

Cotton.

2. A small thing; a sense not now in use.

Follow his chariot; monster-like, be shewn

For poor'st diminutives, for doits! Shakes. Ant. and Cleopatra.

DIMINUTIVELY. adv. [from diminutive.] In a diminutive manner.

DIMINUTIVENESS. n. f. [from diminutive.] Smalness; littleness; pettyness; want of bulk; want of dignity.

DIMISH. adj. [from dim.] Somewhat dim; somewhat obscure.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,

My eyes are somewhat dimish grown;

For nature, always in the right,

To your decays adapts my sight.

Swift.

DIMISSORY. adj. [dimissorius, Latin.] That by which a man is dismissed to another jurisdiction.

A bishop of another diocese ought neither to ordain or admit a clerk, with the consent of his own proper bishop, and without the letters dimissory. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIMITTY. n. f. A fine kind of fustian, or cloth of cotton.

I directed a trowze of fine dimitty. Wifeman's Surgery.

DIMLY. adv. [from dim.]

1. Not with a quick sight; not with a clear perception.

Unspeakable! who sitt'st above these heav'ns,

To us invisible, or dimly seen,

In these thy lowest works. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

2. Not brightly; not luminously.

In the beginning of our pumping the air, the match appeared well lighted, though it had almost filled the receiver with its plentiful fumes; but by degrees it burnt more and more dimly. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

I saw th' angelick guards from earth ascend,

Griev'd they must now no longer man attend;

The beams about their temples dimly shone;

One would have thought the crime had been their own. Dry.

DI'MNESS. n. f. [from dim.]

1. Dulness of sight.

2. Want of apprehension; stupidity.

Answerable to this dimness of their perception was the whole system and body of their religion. Decay of Piety.

DI'MPLE. n. f. [dint, a hole; dintle, a little hole; by a careless pronunciation dimple. Skinner.] The same cavity or depression in the cheek or chin.

The dimple of the upper lip is the common measure of them all. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. i. c. 5.

In her forehead's fair half-round,

Love sits in open triumph crown'd;

He in the dimple of her chin,

In private state, by friends is seen.

Prior.

TO DI'MPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sink in small cavities, or little inequalities.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,

And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,

As shallow streams run dimpling all away. Pope, Epistle ii.

DI'MPLED. adj. [from dimple.] Set with dimples.

On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids. Sh. Ant. and Cl.

DI'MPLY. adj. [from dimple.] Full of dimples; sinking in little inequalities.

As the smooth surface of the dimplly flood,

The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod.

Wharton's Isis.

DIN. n. f. [dyn, a noise; dynan, to make a noise, Sax. dyna, to thunder, Islandick.] A loud noise; a violent and continued sound.

And all the way he roared as he went,

That all the forest with astonishment

Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein

Fled fast away from that so dreadful din. Hubberd's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;

To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar

Of a whole herd of lions.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

While the cock with lively din

Scatters the rear of darkness thin,

And to the stack or the barn-door

Stoutly struts, his dame before.

Milton.

Now night over heav'n

Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,

And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton's Par. Lost.

How, while the troubled elements around,

Earth, water, air, the stunning din resound,

Through streams of smok and adverse fire he rides,

While ev'ry shot is levell'd at his sides.

Smith.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together. Locke.

TO DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

Rather live

To bait thee for his bread, and din your ears

With hungry cries.

Orway's Venice Preserved.

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's half-pence? This hath been often dinned in my ears. Swift.

TO DINE. v. n. [diner, French.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,

And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner:

Good sister, let us dine, and never fret.

Shakespeare.

Myself, he, and my sister,

To-day did dine together.

Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.

He would dine with him the next day.

Clarendon.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,

With whom old Homer makes such noise,

The greatest actions I can find,

Are, that they did their work and din'd.

Prior.

TO DINE. v. a. To give a dinner to; to feed.

Boil this restoring root in gen'rous wine,

And set beside the door the sickly stock to dine. Dryd Virg.

DINE'TICAL. adj. [dineticus.] Whirling round; vertiginous.

Some of late have concluded, from spots in the sun, which appear and disappear again, that, besides the revolution it maketh with its orbs, it hath also a dinetic motion, and rolls upon its own poles. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

A spherical figure is most commodious for dinetic motion, or revolution upon its own axis. Ray on the Creation.

TO DING. pret. dung. v. a. [dringen, Dutch.]

1. To dash with violence.

2. To impress with force.

TO DING. v. n. To bluster; to bounce; to huff. A low word.

He huffs and dings at such a rate, because we will not spend the little we have left to get him the title and estate of lord Strut. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

DING-DONG. n. f. A word by which the sound of bells is imitated.

Let

D I O

Let us all ring fancy's knell;
Ding, dong bell. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

DINGLE. n. f. [from den, or bin, a hollow, Saxon.] A hollow between hills; a dale.
 I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood;
 And every bosky bourn from side to side,
 My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood. Milton.

DINING-ROOM. n. f. [dine and room.] The principal apartment of the house; the room where entertainments are made.
 He went out from the dining-room before he had fallen into error by the intemperance of his meat, or the deluge of drink. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

DINNER. n. f. [diner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.
 Let me not stay a jot for dinner:
 Go, get it ready. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the publick prayers of the church, or some parts of them, be said publickly in the family. Taylor.
 The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
 The quarry share, their plenteous dinner haste. Dryd. Æn.

DINNER-TIME. n. f. [dinner and time.] The time of dining.
 At dinner-time,
 I pray you, have in mind where we must meet. Shakespeare.
 Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
 Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope, Epistle ii.

DINT. n. f. [dýnt, Saxon.]

1. A blow; a stroke.
 Much daunted with that dint, her sense was daz'd;
 Yet kindling rage, herself she gather'd round. Fairy Queen.
 Neither vainly hope
 To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
 Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
 Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milt. Par. Lost.
2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.
 Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
 The dint of pity. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
 He embrac'd her naked body o'er,
 And, straining hard the statue, was afraid
 His hands had made a dint and hurt the maid. Dryden.
3. Violence; force; power.
 We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.
 The dewlap'd bull now chafes along the plain,
 While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
 His well arm'd front against his rival aims,
 And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay.

TO DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.
 With greedy force each other doth assail,
 And strike so fiercely, that they do impress
 Deep dinted furrows in the batter'd mails:
 The iron walls to ward their blows are weak and frail. F. 2.
 Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bone,
 No more shall you return to it alone;
 It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
 Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.
 Deep dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
 Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryd. Æn.

DINUMERATION. n. f. [dinumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCESAN. n. f. [from diocesis.] A bishop as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.
 I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others, for the instruction of their congregation. Tatler, N° 57.

DIOCESS. n. f. [diæccsis. A Greek word compounded of δια and ἐπισκοπία.] The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical. Cowel.
 None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocesis a convenient time. Whitgift.
 He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islanders of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy; that is, nothing at all, since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those isles were annexed to the diocesis of Winchester. Raleigh's Essays.
 St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocesis, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

DIOPTRICAL. } n. f. [διωπτρικαί.] Affording a medium for the DIOPTRICK. } sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.

D I P

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrical glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Boyle.
 View the asperities of the moon through a dioptrick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows. More's Antidote against Atheism.

DIOPTRICKS. n. f. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harris.

DIORTHROSIS. n. f. [διορθωσις, of διορθω, to make strait.] A surgical operation, by which crooked or distorted members are made even, and restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harris.

TO DIP. v. a. particip. dipped, or dipt. [ὑππαν, Saxon; doopen, Dutch.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor.
 The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
 And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
 Which thrice he sprinkl'd round, and thrice aloud
 Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryd. Æn.
 He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
 And from the bright meridian where he stood,
 Descending, dipp'd his hands in lovers blood. Dryd. Fables.
 The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire;
 One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope's Epistles.
 Now on fancy's easy wing convey'd;
 The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
 There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
 Old Bavius sits to dip poetick souls. Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.
 So fishes rising from the main,
 Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
 The moisture dry'd, they sink again,
 And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.
2. To moisten; to wet.
 And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring dew
Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milton.
3. To be engaged in any affair.
 When men are once dipt, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on 'till they are stiffed. L'Estrange, Fab. 126.
 In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dipt in the rebellion of the commons. Dryden's Fables.
4. To engage as a pledge; generally used for the first mortgage.
 Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
 Put out the principal in trusty hands,
 Live on the use, and never dip thy lands. Dryden's Persf.

TO DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.
 We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes; and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot. L'Estrange's Fab.
2. To enter; to pierce.
 The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,
 His bloody beak with his torn liver dy'd. Granville.
3. To enter slightly into any thing.
 When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volume. Pope.
4. To drop by chance into any mass; to chuse by chance.
 With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possess'd?
 Wouldst thou prefer him to some man? Suppose
 I dipp'd among the worst, and Staius chose? Dryden's Persf.

DIPCHICK. n. f. [from dip and chick.] The name of a bird.
Dipchick is so named of his diving and littleness. Carew.

DIPE'TALOUS. adj. [δις and πέταλον.] Having two flower-leaves.

DIPPER. n. f. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

DIPPING Needle. n. f. A device which shews a particular property of the magnetick needle, so that, besides its polarity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively. Phil.

DIPHTHONG. n. f. [διφθονγία.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound; as vain, leaf, Cæsar.
 We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone. Notes on the Iliad.

DIPLOE. n. f. The inner plate or lamina of the skull.

DIPLO'MA. n. f. [διπλωμα.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege, so called because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

DIP'SAN.

DI'PSAS. n. f. [Latin, from διψάω, to thirst.] A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphibiaena dire,
Ceraustes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipsas. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 526.

DI'PTOTE n. f. [διπλωμα.] A noun consisting of two cases only. Clark.

DI'PTYCH. n. f. [diptycha, Latin.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin. Still.

DIRE. adj. [dirus, Latin.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

More by intemperance die
In meats, and drinks, which on the earth shall bring Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear. Milton's P. Lost, b. xi. l. 474.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimæras dire. Milton.

Or what the cross, dire-looking planet finites,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites. Milton.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, despair
Tended the sick. Milton.

Discord! dire sister of the slaughtered pow'r,
Small at her birth, but rising ev'ry hour;
While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound,
She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around. Pope's Il.

DIRECT. adj. [directus, Latin.]

1. Strait, not crooked.

2. Not oblique.

The ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross lines. Bentley's Serm.

3. [In astronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progressively through the zodiac, not retrograde.

Two geomantic figures were display'd,
Above his head, a warrior and a maid,
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryd. Fab.

4. Not collateral, as the grandson succeeds his grandfire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to some end.

Such was as then the state of the king, as it was no time by direct means to seek her. And such was the state of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of seeking her. Sid.

He that does this, will be able to cast off all that is superfluous; he will see what is pertinent, what coherent, what is direct to, what slides by the question. Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be, that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct; not crafty and involved. Bacon's Essay, 21.

7. Plain; express.

He no where, that I know, says it in direct words. Locke.

To DIRECT. v. a. [dirigo, directum, Latin]

1. To aim in a strait line.

Two eagles from a mountain's height,
By Jove's command direct their rapid flight. Pope's Od.

2. To point against as a mark.

The spear flew hissing through the middle space,
And pierc'd his throat, directed at his face. Dryd. Æn.

3. To regulate; to adjust.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Jer. x. 23.
Wisdom is profitable to direct. Ecclus. x. 10.

All that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or else to direct and fort, and call in such as he desires. Locke.

4. To prescribe certain measure; to mark out a certain course.

He directeth it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth. Job xxxvii. 3.

5. To order; to command

DIRECTER. n. f. [director, Latin.]

1. One that directs; one that prescribes.

2. An instrument that serves to guide any manual operation.

DIRECTION. n. f. [directio, Latin.]

1. Aim at a certain point.

The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that distinguishes charity. Smalridge's Serm.

2. Motion impressed by a certain impulse.

These mens opinions are not the product of judgment, or the consequence of reason; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction. Locke.

No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body can either move of itself, or of itself alter the direction of its motion. Cheyney.

3. Order; command; prescription.

From the counsel that St. Jerome giveth Læta, of taking heed how she read the apocrypha; as also by the help of other learned mens judgments, delivered in like case, we may take direction. Hooker b. 5. f. 20.

Ev'n now

I put myself to thy direction. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He needs not our mistrust, since he delivers

Our offices, and what we have to do,

To the direction just. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The nobles of the people digged it by the direction of the law-giver. Numb. xxi. 18.

Mens passions and God's direction seldom agree. K. Charles.

All nature is but art unknown to thee,

All chance, direction which thou canst not see. Pope's Ess.

General directions for scholastic disputers, is never to dispute upon mere trifles. Watts's Improv. Mind, p. 113.

DIRE'CTIVE. n. f. [from direct.]

1. Having the power of direction.

A law therefore generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodness of operation. Hooker, b. 1. f. 7.

A power of command there is without all question, tho' there be some doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reside, whether in the will or the understanding. The true resolution is, that the directive command for counsel is in the understanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will. Bramb. against Hobbs.

On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. ii. c. 1.

2. Informing; shewing the way.

Nor visited by one directive ray,
From cottage streaming, or from airy hall. Thomf. Aut.

DIRE'CTLY. adj. [from direct.]

1. In a strait line; rectilinearly.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is opposed to them, the more it is enlightened; because the light languishes and lessens the farther it removes from its proper source. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

There was no other place assigned to any of this matter, than that whereinto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe which was just underneath. Woodward's N. Hist. p. 4.

If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it shall be refracted by the incident ray. Newt. Opt.

2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of consequence.

Infidels being clean without the church, deny directly and utterly reject the very principles of christianity, which hereticks embrace, and erroneously by misconstruction. Hooker, b. ii. f. 1.

No man hath hitherto been so impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself enemies in the papists directly, because they have kept the scripture from us what they could, and have reserved to themselves a right of interpreting them. Dryden's Pref. Rel. Laici.

His work directly tends to raise sentiments of honour and virtue in his readers. Addison's Freeholder.

No reason can possibly be assigned, why it is best for the world that God Almighty hath such a power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man should have the like. Swift on the Sent. of a Ch. of Engl. Man.

DIRE'CTNESS. n. f. [from direct.] Straitness; tendency to any point; the nearest way.

They argued from celestial causes only, the constant vicinity of the sun, and the directness of his rays; never suspecting that the body of the earth had so great an efficiency in the changes of the air. Bentley's Serm.

DIRE'CTOR. n. f. [director, Latin]

1. One that has authority over others; a superintendent; one that has the general management of a design or work.

Himself stood director over them, with nodding or stamping, shewing he did like or dislike those things he did not understand. Sidney, b. i.

In all affairs thou sole director. Swift's Miscel.

What made directors cheat in south-sea year? Pope's Ep.

2. A rule; an ordinance.

Common forms were not design'd
Directors to a noble mind. Swift's Miscel.

3. An instructor; one who shews the proper methods of proceeding.

They are glad to use such as counsellors and directors in all their dealings which are of weight, as contracts, testaments. Hooker's Pref.

4. One who is consulted in cases of conscience.

I am her director and her guide in spiritual affairs. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

5. An instrument in surgery, by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by sliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being misguided. Sharp's Surgery.

DIRE'CTORY. n. f. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers published in the rebellion for the direction of their sect in acts of worship.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot con-consent to the taking away of the book of common prayer. Oxford Reasons against the Cov.

DIREFUL. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical; all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and full, as dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.] Dire; dreadful; dismal.

Point of spear it never piercen would,
Ne dint of direful sword, divide the substance could. Fa. Qu.

But yet at last, whereas the direful fiend,
She saw not stir, off shaking vain affright,
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end;
Then God she pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight. Fa. Qu.

Direful hap betide that hated wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee. Sh. K. Rich.

The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter. South's Sermon.

I curs'd the direful author of my woes:
'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose. Dryden.

The wrath of Peleus' son, the direful spring
Of all the Grecian woes, O goddess, sing. Pope.

DI'RENESS. n. f. [from dire.] Dismalness; horror; hideousness.

Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts, Cannot once start me. Shakespeare. Macb.

DIRE'PTION, n. f. [direptio, Lat.] the act of plundering.

DIRGE. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn dirige gressus meos, as some pretend; but from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Verstegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakespeare. Haml.

Mean while the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the dirigies and obsequies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon's Hen. VII.

You from above shall hear each day,
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay,
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicedium. Sandy's Paraph.

All due measures of her mourning kept,
Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept. Dryd. Sigis.

DIRIGENT. adj. [dirigens, Latin.]

The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line describent is carried in the generation of any figure. Harris.

DIRK. n. f. [an Earle word.] A kind of dagger used in the Highlands of Scotland.

In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all their warlike geers,
The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,
In which they daily wont to swagger. Tickell.

TO DIRKE, v. a. To spoil; to ruin. Obsolete.

Thy waste bigness but cumbers the ground,
And dirkes the beauties of my blossoms round. Sp. Past.

DIRT. n. f. [dryt, Dutch, dirt, Islandic.] Mud; filth; mire; any thing that sticks to the cloaths or body.

They gilding dirt, in noble verse
Rustick philosophy rehearse. Denham.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, to heap together a little dirt, that shall bury them in the end. Wake's Pr.

They all assured me that the sea rises as high as ever, tho' the great heaps of dirt it brings along with it are apt to choak up the shallows. Addison.

Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows;
From dirt and sea-weed as proud Venice rose:

In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,
And all that rais'd the hero sunk the man. Pope's Ess.

Is yellow dirt the passion of thy life?
Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife. Pope's Ess.

2. Meanness; sordidness.

TO DIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To foul; to bemire; to make filthy; to bedaub; to soil; to pollute; to nasty.

Is in base durance, and contagious prison,
Haul'd thither by mechanic, dirty hands. Sh. Hen. IV.

2. Sullied; not elegant.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one. Locke.

3. Mean; base; despicable.

Such employments are the diseases of labour, and the rust of time, which it contracts not by lying still, but by dirty employment. Taylor's Holy Living.

Marriages would be made up upon more natural motives than meer dirty interests, and increase of riches without measure or end. Temple's Miscellanies.

They come at length to grow sots and epicures, mean in their discourses, and dirty in their practices. South's Sermon.

TO DIRTY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To foul; to soil.

The Lords Strutts lived generously, and never used to dirty their fingers with pen, ink, and counters. Arbuth. Hist. Bull.

2. To disgrace; to scandalize.

DIRUPTION. n. f. [diruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of bursting, or breaking.

2. The state of bursting, or breaking.

DIS. An inseparable particle used in composition, implying commonly a privative or negative signification of the word to which it is joined; as to arm, to disarm; to join, to disjoin.

It is borrowed from des, used by the French and Spaniards in the sense, as desnouer, to untie; desterrar, to banish; from the Latin de; as struo, to build; destruo, to destroy.

DISABILITY. n. f. [from disable.]

1. Want of power to do any thing; weakness; impotence.

Our consideration of creatures, and attention unto scriptures, are not in themselves things of like disability to breed or beget faith. Hocker, b. v. f. 22.

Many withdrew themselves out of pure faintness, and disability to attend the conclusion. Raleigh's Hist. World.

He that knows most of himself, knows least of his knowledge, and the exercised understanding is conscious of its disability. Glanv. Sceps. c. 27.

The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disabilities of brutes. Locke.

2. Want of proper qualifications for any purpose; legal impediment.

A suit is commenced in a temporal court for an inheritance, and the defendant pleads in disability, that the plaintiff is a bastard. Ayliffe's Parergon.

It is true, indeed, that this disadvantage which the dissenters at present lie under, of a disability to receive church preferments, will be easily remedied by the repeal of the test. Swift's Adv. Rep. Sac. Test.

TO DISA'BLE. v. a. [dis and able.]

1. To deprive of natural force; to weaken; to crush.

The invasion of the Scots, and rebellion of the barons, did not only disable this king to be a conqueror, but deprived him both of his kingdom and life. Davies's Ireland

Nor so is overcome
Satan, whose fall from heav'n, a deadlier bruise
Disabled not to give thee thy death's wound. Milt. P. Lost.

A christian's life is a perpetual exercise a wrestling and warfare, for which sensual pleasure disables him, by yielding to that enemy with whom he must strive. Taylor's Holy Living.

2. To impair; to diminish.

'Tis not unknown to you Anthonio,
How much I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance. Shakespeare.

3. To make unactive.

I have known a great fleet disabled for two months, and thereby lose great occasions by an indisposition of the admiral. Temple.

4. To deprive of usefulness or efficacy.

Farewel, Monsieur Traveller; look you list, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country. Sh.

Your days I will alarm, I'll haunt your nights,
And worse than age disable your delights. Dryden's Aurenzebe.

5. To exclude as wanting proper qualifications.

I will not disable any for proving a scholar, nor yet dissemble that I have seen many happily forced upon the course, to which by nature they seem much indisposed. Wotton.

TO DISABU'SE. v. a. [dis and abuse.] To set free from a mistake; to disentangle from a fallacy; to set right; to undeceive.

The imposture and fallacy of our senses impose not only on common heads, but even more refined mercuries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse you. Glanv.

Those teeth fair Lyce must not show,
If she would bite her lovers: though
Like birds they stoop at seeming grapes,
Are disabus'd, when first the gapes. Waller.

6 Z

If by simplicity you meant a general defect in those that profess angling, I hope to disabuse you. Waller's Angler.

Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;

Still by himself abus'd, or disabus'd. Pope's Ess. on Man.

DISACCOMMODATION. n. f. [dis and accommodation.] The state of being unfit or unprepared.

Devastations have happened in some places more than in others, according to the accommodation or disaccommodation of them to such calamities. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

TO DISACCU'STOM. v. a. [dis and accustom.] To destroy the force of habit by disuse or contrary practice.

DISACQUA'INTANCE. n. f. [dis and acquaintance.] Disuse of familiarity.

DISADVA'NTAGE. n. f. [dis and advantage.]

1. Loss; injury to interest; as, he sold to disadvantage.

2. Diminution of any thing desirable, as credit, fame, honour. Our old English poet, Chaucer, in many things resembled Ovid, and that with no disadvantage on the side of the modern author. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

The most shining merit goes down to posterity with disadvantage, when it is not placed by writers in its proper light. Addison's Freeholder.

Those parts already published give reason to think, that the Iliad will appear with no disadvantage to that immortal poem. Addison's Freeholder.

Their testimony will not be of much weight to its disadvantage, since they are liable to the common objection of condemning what they did not understand. Swift.

3. A state not prepared for defence.

But all in vain; no fort can be so strong,

Ne fleshly breast can armed be so sound,

But will at last be won with batt'ry long,

Or unawares at disadvantage found. Fairy Queen.

TO DISADVA'NTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure in interest of any kind.

All other violences are so far from advancing christianity, that they extremely weaken and disadvantage it. Decay of Piety.

DISADVA'NTAGEABLE. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to profit; producing loss. A word not used.

In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long; for hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interest. Bacon's Ess.

DISADVANTA'GEOUS. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to interest; contrary to convenience; unfavourable.

A multitude of eyes will narrowly inspect every part of him, consider him nicely in all views, and not be a little pleased when they have taken him in the worst and most disadvantageous lights. Add. Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 256.

DISADVANTA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from disadvantageous.] In a manner contrary to interest or profit; in a manner not favourable to any useful end.

An approving nod or smile serves to drive you on, and make you display yourselves more disadvantageously. Gov. Ten.

They had attempted to disaffect and discontent his majesty's late army. Clarendon.

DISAFFE'CTED. part. adj. [from disaffect.] Not disposed to zeal or affection. Usually applied to those who are enemies to the government.

By denying civil worship to the emperor's statues, which the custom then was to give, they were proceeded against as disaffected to the emperor. Stilling. Def. of Dis. on Ro. Idol.

DISAFFE'CTEDLY. adv. [from disaffected.] After a disaffected manner.

DISAFFE'CTEDNESS. n. f. [from disaffected.] The quality of being disaffected.

DISAFFE'CTION. n. f. [from disaffect.] Want of zeal for the government; want of ardour for the reigning prince.

In this age, every thing disliked by those who think with the majority, is called disaffection. Swift.

DISAFFI'RMANCE. n. f. [dis and affirm.] Confutation; negation.

That kind of reasoning which reduceth the opposite conclusion to something that is apparently absurd, is a demonstration in disaffirmance of any thing that is affirmed. Hale's Or. of Man.

TO DISAFFO'REST. v. a. [dis and forest.] To throw open to common purposes; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

The commissioners of the treasury moved the king to disafforest some forests of his, explaining themselves of such forests as lay out of the way, not near any of the king's houses. Bacon.

How happy's he, which hath due place assign'd

To his beasts; and disaff. rested his mind? Donne.

TO DISAGR'EE. v. n. [dis and agree.]

1. To differ; not to be the same.

The mind clearly and infallibly perceives all distinct ideas to disagree; that is, the one not to be the other. Locke.

2. To differ; not to be of the same opinion.

Why both the bands in worship disagree,

And some adore the flow'r, and some the tree. Dry Fl. and L.

3. To be in a state of opposition: followed by fr. m or with, before the opposite.

It containeth many improprieties, disagreeing almost in all things from the true and proper description. Brown's V. Er.

Strange it is, that they reject the plainest sense of scripture, because it seems to disagree with what they call reason. Atterbury's Sermons.

DISAGREE'ABLE. adj. [from disagree.]

1. Contrary; unsuitable.

Some demon, an enemy to the Greeks, had forced her to a conduct disagreeable to her sincerity. Pope's Od. b. iv. notes.

2. Unpleasing; offensive.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, either agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

DISAGREE'ABLENESS. n. f. [from disagreeable.]

1. Unsuitableness; contrariety.

2. Unpleasantness; offensiveness.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son for all the dirt and foulness of his cloaths; the dearness of the person easily apologizing for the disagreeableness of the habit. South's S.

DISAGREE'MENT. n. f. [from disagree.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; diversity; not identity.

These carry such plain and evident notes and characters, either of disagreement or affinity with one another, that the several kinds of them are easily known and distinguished. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

2. Difference of opinion; contrariety of sentiments.

They seemed one to cross another, as touching their several opinions about the necessity of sacraments, whereas in truth their disagreement is not great. Hooker, b. v. f. 57.

TO DISALLO'W. v. a. [dis and allow.]

1. To deny authority to any.

When, said she,

Were those first councils disallow'd by me?

Or where did I at sure tradition strike,

Provided still it were apostolic. Dryd. Hind. and Pantb.

2. To consider as unlawful; not to permit an act.

Their usual kind of disputing sheweth, that they do not disallow only these Romish ceremonies which are unprofitable, but count all unprofitable which are Romish. Hooker.

3. To censure by some posterior act.

It was known that the most eminent of those who professed his own principles, publicly disallowed his proceedings. Sw.

4. Not to justify.

There is a secret, inward foreboding fear, that some evil or other will follow the doing of that which a man's own conscience disallows him in. South's Sermon.

TO DISALLOW. v. n. To refuse permission; not to grant; not to make lawful.

God doth in converts, being married, allow continuance with infidels, and yet disallow that the faithful, when they are free, should enter into bonds of wedlock with such. Hooker.

DISALLO'WABLE. adj. [from disallow.] Not allowable; not to be suffered.

DISALLO'WANCE. n. f. [from disallow.] Prohibition.

God accepts of a thing suitable for him to receive, and for us to give, where he does not declare his refusal and disallowance of it. South's Sermon.

TO DISANIMA'TE. v. a. [dis and animate.]

1. To deprive of life.

2. To discourage; to deject; to depress.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He was confounded and disanimated at his presence, and added, how can the servant of my lord talk with my lord? Boyle's Seraph. Love.

DISANIMA'TION. n. f. [from disanimate.] Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation. Brown's Vulg. Er. b. iii. l. 10.

TO DISANNU'L. v. a. [dis and annul.] This word is formed contrary to analogy by those who not knowing the meaning of the word annul, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle. It ought therefore to be rejected as ungrammatical and barbarous. To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

To

The Jews ordinances for us to resume, were to check our Lord himself, which hath disannulled them. Hooker, b. iv §. 11.

That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of mens fortunes and estates, and the like points of absolute power, being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To be in both worlds full,

Is more than God was, who was hungry here:

Wouldst thou his laws of fasting disannul? Herbert.

Wilt thou my judgments disannul? Defame

My equal rule, to clear thyself of blame? Sandys.

DISANNU'LEMENT. n. f. [from disannul.] The act of making void.

TO DISAPPE'AR. v. n. [disparoitre, French.] To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I wak'd

To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton's Parad. Lost.

When the night and winter disappear,

The purple morning, rising with the year,

Salutes the Spring.

Dryden.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Criticks I saw, that other names deface,

And fix their own with labour in their place;

Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,

Or disappear'd, and left the first behind. Pope's Tem. of Fame.

TO DISAPPO'INT. v. a. [dis and appoint.]

1. To defeat of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.

The superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson, Sermon i.

Whilst the champion, with redoubled might,

Strikes home the jav'lin, his retiring foe

Shrinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow. Addison.

There's nothing like surprising the rogues: how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou hast prevented their revenge. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praises. Addis. Spectat.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.

The Janizaries, disappointed by the bassas of the spoil of the merchants, especially Christians and Jews, received of the bounty of Solyman a great largess. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

DISAPPO'INTMENT. n. f. [from disappoint.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings: how many accidents have passed for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen? How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin? Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. Addison's Spectator.

DISAPPROBATION. n. f. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

Pope was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others written in his youth.

Pope to Swift.

TO DISAPPRO'VE. v. a. [disapprover, French.] To dislike; to censure; to find fault with.

I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;

Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disapprov'd.

Prior.

Without good breeding, truth is disapprov'd;

That only makes superior sense below'd. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted hither from Holland, and was disapproved of by our court.

Swift.

DISARD. n. f. [disi *disi*g, Saxon, a fool, Skinner; *dis*eur, French, Junius.] A prattler; a boasting talker. This word is inserted both by Skinner and Junius; but I do not remember it.

TO DISA'RM. v. a. [desarmer, French.]

1. To spoil or divest of arms; to deprive of arms.

I am still the same,

By different ways still moving to one fame;

And by disarming you, I now do more

To save the town, than arming you before. Dryd. In. Emp.

2. It has of before the arms taken away.

They would be immediately disarmed of their great magazine of artillery.

Locke.

TO DISARRA'Y. v. a. [dis and array.] To undress any one; to divest of cloaths.

So, as she bad, the witch they disarray'd. Fairy Queen.

Now night is come, now soon her disarray,

And in her bed her lay.

Spenser's Epithalamium.

DISARRA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disorder; confusion; loss of the regular order of battle.

He returned towards the river, to prevent such danger as the disarray, occasioned by the narrowness of the bridge, might cast upon them.

Hayward.

Disarray and shameful rout ensue,

And force is added to the fainting crew. Dryden's Fables.

2. Undress.

DISA'STER. n. f. [desastre, French.]

1. The blast or stroke of an unfavourable planet.

Stars shone with trains of fire, dews of blood fall;

Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star;

Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,

Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse. Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. Misfortune; grief; mishap; misery; calamity.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair,

That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care,

Some dire disaster, or by force or flight;

But what, or where, the fates have wrapt in night. Pope.

TO DISA'STER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blast by the stroke of an unfavourable star.

Ah, chaste bed of mine, said she, which never heretofore couldst accuse me of one defiled thought, how canst thou now receive that disaster'd chancing?

Sidney, b. ii.

2. To afflict; to mischief.

These are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

In his own fields, the swain

Disaster'd stands.

DISA'STROUS. adj. [from disaster.]

1. Unlucky; not fortunate.

That day seemeth a most disastrous day to the Scots, not only in regard of this overthrow, but for that upon the same day they were in like sort defeated by the English at Flooden-field.

Hayward.

2. Unhappy; calamitous; miserable; struck with affliction.

Then Juno, pitying her disastrous fate,

Send Iris down, her pangs to mitigate.

Denham.

Immediately after his return from this very expedition, such disastrous calamities befel his family, that he burnt two of his children himself.

South's Sermons.

Fly the pursuit of my disastrous love,

And from my unhappy neighbourhood remove. Dryd. Auren.

3. Gloomy; threatening misfortune.

The moon,

In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds

On half the nations.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 597.

DISA'STROUSLY. adv. [from disastrous.] In a dismal manner.

Wotton.

TO DISAU'THORISE. v. a. [dis and authorise.] To deprive of credit or authority.

The obtusion of such particular instances as these, are insufficient to disauthorise a note grounded upon the final intention of nature.

Wotton.

TO DISBA'ND. v. a. [dis and band.]

1. To dismiss from military service; to break up an army; to dismiss soldiers from their colours.

They disbanded themselves, and returned every man to his own dwelling.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

Pythagoras bids us in our station stand,

'Till God, our general, shall us disband.

Denham.

This if you do, to end all future strife,

I am content to lead a private life;

Disband my army to secure the state. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Bid him disband his legions,

Restore the commonwealth to liberty.

Addison's Cato.

2. To spread abroad; to scatter.

Some imagine that a quantity of water, sufficient to make scuh such a deluge, was created upon that occasion; and, when the business was done, all disbanded again, and annihilated. Woodw.

TO DISBAN'D. v. n. To retire from military service; to separate; to break up.

Our navy was upon the point of disbanding, and many of our men come ashore. Bacon's War with Spain.

The rang'd pow'rs
Disband, and wand'ring, each his several way Pursues. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 525.

The common soldiers, and inferior officers, should be fully paid upon their disbanding. Clarendon.

Were it not for some small remainders of piety and virtue, which are yet left scattered among mankind, human society would in a short space disband and run into confusion, and the earth would grow wild and become a forest. Tillotson.

TO DISBA'RK. v. a. [debarquer, French.] To land from a ship; to put on shore.

Together sail'd they, fraught with all the things
To service done by land that might belong,
And, when occasion serv'd, disbarked them. Fairfax, b. i.

The ship we moor on these obscure abodes;
Disbark the sheep, an offering to the gods. Pope's Odyssey.

DISBELIEF. n. f. [from disbelieve.] Refusal of credit; denial of belief.

Our belief or disbelief of a thing does not alter the nature of the thing. Tillotson's Sermons.

TO DISBELIEVE. v. a. [dis and believe.] Not to credit; not to hold true.

The thinking it impossible his sins should be forgiven, though he should be truly penitent, is a sin, but rather of infidelity than despair; it being the disbelieving of an eternal truth of God's. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Such, who profess to disbelieve a future state, are not always equally satisfied with their own reasonings. Atterbury.

From a fondness to some vices, which the doctrine of futurity rendered uneasy, they brought themselves to doubt of religion; or, out of a vain affectation of seeing farther than other men, pretended to disbelieve it. Rogers, Sermon 13.

DISBELIEVER. n. f. [from disbelieve.] One who refuses belief; one who denies any position to be true.

An humble soul is frighted into any particular sentiments, because a man of great name pronounces heresy upon the contrary sentiments, and casts the disbeliever out of the church. Watts's Logick.

TO DISBE'NCH. v. a. [dis and bench.] To drive from a seat.

Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not?
—No, sir; yet oft,

When blows have made me stay, I fled from words. Shakesp.

TO DISBRA'NCH. v. a. [dis and branch.] To separate or break off, as a branch from a tree.

I fear your disposition:
That nature which contemns its origine,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself:
She that herself will sliver and disbranch
From her maternal sap, perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But for such as are newly planted, they need not be disbranched till the sap begins to stir, that so the wound may be healed without the scar, which our frosts do frequently leave. Evelyn's Kalendar.

TO DISBU'D. v. a. [With gardeners.] To take away the branches or sprigs newly put forth, that are ill placed. Diët.

TO DISBU'RDEN. v. a. [dis and burden.]
1. To ease of a burden; to unload.

Better yet do I live, that though by my thoughts I be plunged Into my life's bondage, I yet may disburden a passion. Sidney.

The river, with ten branches or streams, disburdens himself within the Persian sea. Peacham on Drawing.

Disburden'd heav'n rejoic'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. To disencumber, discharge, or clear.

They removed either by casualty and tempest, or by intention and design, either out of lucre of gold, or for the disburdening of the countries, surcharged with multitudes of inhabitants. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

We shall disburden the piece of those hard shadowings, which are always ungraceful. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. To throw off a burden.

Lucia, disburden all thy cares on me,
And let me share thy most retired distress. Addison's Cato.

TO DISBU'RDEN. v. n. To ease the mind.

TO DISBU'RSE. v. a. [debourser, French.] To spend or lay out money.

Money is now not disbursed at once, as it might be; but drawn into a long length, by sending over now twenty thousand, and next half year ten thousand pounds. Spenser.

Nor would we deign him burial for his men,
Till he disburs'd at St. Colmekil Isle,

Ten thousand dollars to our general. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

As Alexander received great sums, he was no less generous and liberal in disbursing of them. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DISBU'RSEMENT. n. f. [deboursement, French.] A disbursing or laying out.

It may be, Irenus, that the queen's treasure, in so great occasions of disbursement, is not always so ready, nor so plentiful, as it can spare so great a sum together. Spenser's Ireland.

DISBURSER. n. f. [from disburse.] One that disburses.

DISCALCEATED. adj. [discalceatus, Latin.] Stripped of shoes.

DISCALCEATION. n. f. [from discalceated.] The act of pulling off the shoes.

The custom of discalceation, or putting off their shoes at meals, is conceived to have been done, as by that means keeping their beds clean. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 6.

TO DISCA'NDY. v. n. [from dis and candy.] To dissolve; to melt. Hammer.

The hearts,
That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do disbandy, melt their sweets
On blossoming Caesar. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

TO DISCA'RD. v. a. [dis and card.]

1. To throw out of the hand such cards as are useless.

2. To discharge or eject from service or employment.

These men being certainly jewels to a wise man, considering what wonders they were able to perform, yet were discarded by that unworthy prince, as not worthy the holding. Sid.

Their captains, if they list, discard whom they please, and send away such as will perhaps willingly be rid of that dangerous and hard service. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Should we own that we have a very imperfect idea of substance, would it not be hard to charge us with discarding substance out of the world? Locke.

Justice discards party, friendship, kindred, and is always therefore represented as blind. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 99.

They blame the favourites, and think it nothing extraordinary that the queen should be at an end of her patience, and resolve to discard them. Swift.

I do not conceive why a sunk discarded party, who neither expect nor desire more than a quiet life, should be charged with endeavouring to introduce popery. Swift.

DISCA'RNATE. adj. [dis and caro, flesh; scarnato, Ital.] Stripped of flesh.

'Tis better to own a judgment, though but with a curta suppellex of coherent notions, than a memory, like a sepulchre, furnished with a load of broken and discarnate bones. Glanville's Scept. c. 17.

TO DISCA'SE. v. a. [dis and case.] To strip; to undress.

Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell:
I will discase me, and myself present. Shakesp. Tempest.

TO DISCERN. v. a. [discerno, Latin.]

1. To descry; to see; to discover.

And behold among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths a young man void of understanding. Prov. vii. 7.

2. To judge; to have knowledge of.

What doth better become wisdom than to discern what is worthy the loving? Sidney, b. ii.

Does any here know me? This is not Lear:
Does Lear walk thus, speak thus? Where are his eyes?
Either his motion weakens, or his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakespeare's King Lear.

You should be rul'd and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state
Better than you yourself. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To distinguish.

To discern such buds as are fit to produce blossoms, from such as will display themselves but in leaves, is no difficult matter. Boyle.

4. To make the difference between.

They follow virtue for reward, to-day;
To-morrow vice, if she give better pay:
We are so good, or bad, just at a price;
For nothing else discerns the virtue or vice. Ben. Johnson.

TO DISCE'RN. v. n. To make distinction.

Great part of the country was abandoned to the spoils of the soldiers, who not troubling themselves to discern between a subject and a rebel, whilst their liberty lasted, made indifferently profit of both. Hayward.

The custom of arguing on any side, even against our persuasions, dims the understanding, and makes it by degrees lose the faculty of discerning between truth and falsehood. Locke.

DISCE'RNER. n. f. [from discern.]

1. Discoverer; he that descries.

'Twas said they saw but one; and no discerner
Durst wag his tongue in censure. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

2. Judge; one that has the power of distinguishing.

He was a great observer and discerner of mens natures and humours, and was very dextrous in compliance, where he found it useful. Clarendon, b. viii.

How unequal discerners of truth there are, and easily exposed unto error, will appear by their unqualified intellectuals. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.

DISCE'RNIBLE. adj. [from discern.] Discoverable; perceptible distinguishable; apparent.

It

DIS

Is is indeed a sin of so gross, so formidable a bulk, that there needs no help of opticks to render it discernible, and therefore I need not farther expatiate on it. Gov. of the Tongue.

All this is easily discernible by the ordinary discourses of the understanding. South's Sermons.

DISCERNIBLENESS. n. f. [from discernible.] Visibleness.

Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Behold, every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture. 1 Sa. xiv. 20.

What a defeat and discomfiture is it to a man, when he comes to use this wealth, to find it all false metal? Gov. Tongue.

He sent his angels to fight for his people; and the discomfiture and slaughters of great hosts, is attributed to their assistance. Atterbury's Sermons.

DISCOMFORT. n. f. [dis and comfort.] Uneasiness; sorrow; melancholy; gloom.

This himself did foresee, and therefore armed his church, to the end they might sustain it without discomfort. Hooker.

Discomfort guides my tongue,

And bids me speak of nothing but despair. Shakesp. Rich. II.

In

D I S

In solitude there is not only discomfort, but weakness also. Sou.
TO DISCOMFORT. v. a. [from the noun.] To grieve; to sadden; to deject.

Her champion went away discomforted as much as discomforted. Sidney.

His funeral shall not be in our camp,
 Left it discomfort us. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

DISCOMFORTABLE. n. f. [from discomfort.]

1. One that is melancholy and refuses comfort.

Discomfortable cousin, know't thou not,

That when the searching eye of heav'n is hid Behind the globe, it lights the lower world. Shakes. R. II.

2. That causes sadness.

What! did that help poor Dorus, whose eyes could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable? Sidney.

TO DISCOMMEND. v. a. [dis and commend.] To blame; to censure; to mention with disapprobation.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve, either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.

Now you will all be wits; and he, I pray,
 And you, that discommend it, mend the play. Denham.

Neither do I discommend the lofty stile in tragedy, which is naturally pompous and magnificent. Dryd. Span. Fry. Dedicat.

DISCOMMENDABLE. adj. [from discommend.] Blameable; censurable; deserving blame.

Puffanimity is, according to Aristotle's morality, a vice very discommendable. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DISCOMMENDABLENESS. n. f. [from discommendable.] Blameableness; liableness to censure. Diæ.

DISCOMMENDATION. n. f. [from discommend.] Blame; reproach; censure.

Tully assigns three motions, whereby, without any discommendation, a man might be drawn to become an accuser of others. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DISCOMMENDER. n. f. [from discommend.] One that discommends; a dispraiser.

TO DISCOMMODO. v. a. [dis and commode, French.] To put to inconvenience; to molest; to incommode.

DISCOMMODOUS. adj. [from discommode.] Inconvenient; troublesome; unpleasing.

So many thousand soldiers, unfit for any labour or other trade, must either seek service and employment abroad, which may be dangerous, or else employ themselves here at home, which may be discommodious. Spenser's State of Ireland.

DISCOMMODITY. n. f. [from discommode.] Inconvenience; disadvantage; hurt; mischief.

We speak now of usury, how the discommunities of it may be best avoided, and the commodities retained: or how in the balance of commodities and discommunities, the qualities of usury, are to be reconciled. Bacon.

It is better that a ship should be preserved with some discommodity to the sailors, than that, the sailors being in health, the ship should perish. Hayward.

TO DISCOMPOSE. v. a. [decomposer, French.]

1. To disorder; to unsettle.

The debate upon the self-denying ordinance had raised many jealousies, and discomposed the confidence that had formerly been between many of them. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. To ruffle; to disorder.

Now Betty from her master's bed had flown,
 And softly stole to discompose her own. Swift.

3. To disturb the temper; to agitate by perturbation.

No more, dear mother: ill in death it shows,
 Your peace of mind by rage to discompose. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

4. To offend; to fret; to vex.

Men, who possess all the advantages of life, are in a state where there are many accidents to disorder and discompose, but few to please them. Swift.

5. To displace; to discard.

Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely suspicious, he never put down or discomposed a counsellor, or near servant. Bac.

DISCOMPOSURE. n. f. [from discompose.] Disorder; perturbation.

He threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and with abundance of tears; and continued in this melancholick discomposure of mind many days. Clarendon.

TO DISCONCERT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unsettle the mind; to discompose.

You need not provoke their spirits by outrages: a careless gesture, a word, or a look, is enough to disconcert them. Collier.

2. To break a scheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFORMITY. n. f. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement; inconsistency.

Lies arise from error and mistake, or malice and forgery; they consist in the disagreement and disconformity betwixt the speech and the conception of the mind, or the conceptions of the mind and the things themselves, or the speech and the things. Hakewill on Providence.

DISCONGRUITY. n. f. [dis and congruity.] Disagreement; inconsistency.

There is want of capacity in the thing, to sustain such a duration from the intrinsic discongruity of the one to the other. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

D I S

DISCONSOLATE. adj. [dis and console.] Without comfort; hopeless; sorrowful; melancholy.

See Cassius all disconsolate,

With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.

If patiently thy bidding they obey,

Disinfect them not disconsolate. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The ladies and the knights, no shelter nigh,

Were dropping wet, disconsolate and wan,

And through their thin array receiv'd the rain. Dryden.

The moon reflects the sunbeams to us, and so, by illuminating the air, takes away in some measure the disconsolate darkness of our winter-nights. Ray on the Creation.

DISCONSOLATELY. adv. [from disconsolate.] In a disconsolate manner; comfortlessly.

DISCONSOLATENESS. n. f. [from disconsolate.] The state of being disconsolate.

DISCONTENT. n. f. [dis and content.] Want of content; uneasiness at the present state.

I see your brows full of discontent,

Your hearts of sorrows, and your eyes of tears. Shakespeare.

Not that their pleasures caus'd her discontent

She sigh'd, not that they stay'd, but that she went. Pope.

DISCONTENT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneasy at the present state; dissatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumspect and slow, discountenanced and discontent, and those the earl singled as fittest for his purpose. Hayward.

TO DISCONTENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dissatisfy; to make uneasy at the present state.

I know a discontented gentleman,

Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit. Shakes.

The discontented now are only they

Whose crimes before did your just cause betray. Dryden.

DISCONTENTED. participial adj. [from discontent.] Uneasy; cheerless; malevolent.

Let us know

What will tie up your discontented sword? Shak. Ant. and Cl.

These are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world, a diseased body and a discontented mind. Tillotson.

The goddess, with a discontented air,

Seems to reject him, though she grants his pray'r. Pope.

DISCONTENTEDNESS. n. f. [from discontented.] Uneasiness; want of ease; dissatisfaction.

A beautiful bust of Alexander the Great, casts up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or discontentedness in his looks. Addison's Travels.

DISCONTENTMENT. n. f. [from discontent.] The state of being discontented; uneasiness.

These are the voices that fill them with general discontentment, as though the bosom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noisome than any dungeon. Hooker.

Certainly the politick and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the poison of discontentments.

Bacon, Essay 16.

DISCONTINUANCE. n. f. [from discontinue.]

1. Want of cohesion of parts; want of union of one part with another; disruption.

The stillicides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops, which is the figure that saveth the body most from discontinuance. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Cessation; intermission.

Let us consider, whether our approaches to him are sweet and refreshing, and if we are uneasy under any long discontinuation of our conversation with him. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as discontinuance of possession, or discontinuance of process. The effect of discontinuance of possession is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatsoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but must seek to recover possession by law. The effect of discontinuance of plea is, that the instance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the suit afresh. Cowel.

DISCONTINUATION. n. f. [from discontinue.] Disruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; disruption; separation.

Upon any discontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls. Newt. Opt.

TO DISCONTINUE. v. a. [discontinuer, French.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread, have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth them out; and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Bac.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies. Jer. xvii. 4.

To

To DISCONTINUE. v. a. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lies I'll tell

That men shall swear I've discontinued school

Shakespeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like, and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon's Essays.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINUITY. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Disunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That this discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal density with their parts. Newton Opt.

DISCONVENIENCE. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature, but in these disconveniences of nature deliberation hath no place at all. Pramhall's Answer to Hobbs.

DISCORD. n. f. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!

And I, for winking at your discords too,

Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare. Rom. and Jul.

Take but degree away, untune that string,

And hark what discord follows; each thing mee's

In meer oppugnancy. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cress.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth discord among brethren. Prov. vi. 19.

2. Difference, or contrariety of qualities.

Discord, like that of music's various parts,

Discord that makes the harmony of hearts;

Discord that only this dispute shall bring,

Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryd. Ep.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;

All chance, direction which thou canst not see;

All discord, harmony not understood;

All partial evil, universal good.

Pope's Essay on Man.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is sound alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon's N. Hist. Part I. p. 400.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,

Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps.

Shakespeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords she maketh the sweetest harmony?

Peacham.

To DISCORD. v. n. [discordo, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 227.

DISCORDANCE. } n. f. [from discord.] Disagreement; op-

DISCORDANCY. } position; inconsistency.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordans, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,

But clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere;

So various, so discordant is the mind,

That in our will a different will we find.

Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly distract and disorder the harmony of the motions and revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cheyne's Phil. Princip.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred, if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; inasmuch, that if they be discor- dantly tuned, though each of them struck apart, would yield a pleasing sound; yet being struck together, they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle on Colours.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictory manner.

To DISCOVER. v. a. [descouvrir, French; dis and cover.]

1. To shew; to disclose; to bring to light.

Go draw aside the curtains, and discover

The several caskets to this noble prince. Sh. Merch. of Ven.

He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death. Job xii. 22.

2. To make known.

We will pass over unto those men, and we will discover ourselves unto them. Ija. xiv. 8.

3. To find out; to spy.

He shall never by any alteration in me discover my knowledge of his mistake. Pope's Letters.

DISCOVERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That which may be found out.

That mineral matter which is so sparingly and dispersedly intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or if discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, can never be separated. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, whose connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts's Log.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown's Vulg. Err. b i. c. 6.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley's Serm.

DISCOVERER. n. f. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompence the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Holder's El.

Places receive appellations according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Notes on Od.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubled in those early times; and that the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbuthnot on Coin.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Add. Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 483.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth,

To know the numbers of our enemies. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

DISCOVERY. n. f. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who since have us'd the open sea,

Than the bold English none more fame have won;

Beyond the year, and out of heaven's high way,

They make discoveries where they see no sun. Dryd. A. M.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What must I hold a candle to my shame?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light.

Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,

And I should be obscur'd. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discoveries of the next. South's Serm.

It would be necessary to say something of the state to which the war hath reduced us; such a discovery ought to be made as late as possible. Swift.

To DISCOUNSEL. v. a. [dis and counsel.] To dissuade; to give contrary advice.

But him that palmer from that vanity,

With temperate advice discounsell'd. Spenser's Fa. Qu.

DISCOUNT. n. f. [dis and count.] The sum refunded in a bargain.

His whole intention was, to buy a certain quantity of copper money from Wood at a large discount, and sell them as well as he could. Swift's Miscel.

To DISCOUNT. v. a. [from the noun.] To count back; to pay back again.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:

My prayers and penance shall discount for these,

And beg of heav'n to charge the bill on me. Dryd. Don Seb.

The farmers spitefully combin'd,

Force him to take his tithes in kind;

And Parvifol discounts arrears,

By bills for taxes and repairs.

Swift's Miscel.

To DISCOURTENANCE. v. a. [dis and countenance.]

1. To discourage by cold treatment.

Unwilling they were to discourtenance any man who was willing to serve them. Clarendon, b. viii.

The truly upright judge will always countenance right, and discourtenance wrong. Atterbury's Serm.

2. To

2. To abash; to put to shame.

Wisdom in discourse with her,

Loses discountenanced, and like folly shews. Milt. Par. Lost.

He came, and with him Eve, more loth, though first

To offend; discountenanc'd both, and discompos'd. Milton.

How would one look from his majestic brow,

Seated as on the top of virtue's hill,

Discount'nance her despis'd. Milton.

DISCOUNTEINANCE. n. f. [dis and countenance.] Cold treatment; unfavourable aspect; unfriendly regard.

He thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit. Clarendon.

All accidental misfortunes, how inevitable soever, were still attended with very apparent discountenance. Clarendon, b. viii.

In expectation of the hour of judgment, he patiently bears all the difficulties of duty, and the discountenance he meets with from a wicked and prophane world. Rogers's Serm.

DISCOUNTEINANCER. n. f. [from discountenance.] One that discourages by cold treatment; one that depresses by unfriendly regard.

Rumours of scandal and murmurs against the king and his government, taxed him for a great taxer of his people and discountenancer of his nobility. Bacon's Hen. VII.

TO DISCOURAGE. v. a. [decourager, Fr. dis and courage.]

1. To depress; to deprive of confidence; to deject; to daunt.

I might neither encourage the rebels insolence, nor discourage the protestants loyalty and patience. K. Charles.

The apostle with great zeal discourages too unreasonable a presumption. Rogers's Serm.

2. To deter; to fright from any attempt: with from before the thing.

Wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land? Numb. xxxii. 7.

3. It is irregularly used by Temple, with to before the following word.

You may keep your beauty and your health, unless you destroy them yourself, or discourage them to stay with you, by using them ill. Temple's Miscell.

DISCOURAGER. n. f. [from discourage.] One that impresses diffidence and terror.

Most men in years, as they are generally discouragers of youth, are like old trees, which being past bearing themselves, will suffer no young plants to flourish beneath them. Pope.

DISCOURAGEMENT. n. f. [from discourage.]

1. The act of deterring, or depressing hope.

2. Determent; that which deters from any thing.

Amongst other impediments of any inventions, it is none of the meanest discouragements, that they are so generally derided by common opinion. Wilkins's Math. Magn.

The books read at schools and colleges, are full of incitements to virtue, and discouragements from vice. Swift.

3. The cause of depression, or fear.

To things we would have them learn, the great and only discouragement is that they are called to them. Locke.

DISCOURSE. n. f. [discurs, Fr. discursus, Latin.]

1. The act of the understanding, by which it passes from premises to consequences.

By reason of that original weakness in the instruments, without which the understanding part is not able in this world by discourse to work, the very conceit of painfulness is a bridle to stay us. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,

Looking before and after, gave us not

That capability and godlike reason

To rust in us unus'd. Shakespeare.

The third act of the mind is that which connects propositions, and deduceth conclusions from them: and this the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it, if we name it reason. Glanv. Sceps. c. 13.

2. Conversation; mutual intercourse of language; talk.

He waxeth wiser than himself, more by an hour's discourse, than by a day's meditation. Bacon's Essays.

In thy discourse, if thou desire to please,

All such is courteous, useful, new, or witty;

Usefulness come by labour, wit by ease,

Courtesy grows in court, news in the city. Herbert.

The vanquish'd party with the victors join'd,

Nor wanted sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Dryd.

3. Effusion of language; speech.

Topical and superficial arguments, of which there is store to be found on both sides, filling the head with variety of thoughts, and the mouth with copious discourse, serve only to amuse the understanding and entertain company. Locke.

4. A treatise; a dissertation either written or uttered.

The discourse here is about ideas, which, he says, are real things, and seen in God. Locke.

Plutarch, in his discourse upon garrulity, commends the fidelity of the companions of Ulysses. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

TO DISCOURSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To converse; to talk; to relate.

How wert thou handled, being prisoner?

Discourse, I pry'three on this turret's top. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

VOL. I.

Of various things discursing as he pass'd,

Anchises hither bends. Dryd.

2. To treat upon in a solemn or set manner.

That the general maxims we are discursing of are not known to children, ideots, and a great part of mankind, we have already sufficiently proved. Locke.

3. To reason; to pass from premises to consequences.

And yet the pow'rs of her discursing thoughts,

From the collection is a diverse thing. Davies.

Brutes do want that quick discursing pow'r. Davies.

TO DISCOURSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat of.

Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains

To go with us into the abbey here,

And let us there at large discourse all our fortunes. Sh. Co. Err.

DISCOURSE, n. f. [from discourse.]

1. A speaker; an haranguer.

The tract of every thing,

Would by a good discourser lose some life,

Which action's self was tongue to. Shakespeare.

2. A writer on any subject; a dissertator.

Philologists and critical discourers, who look beyond the obvious exteriors of things, will not be angry at our narrower explorations. Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errors.

But it seems to me, that such discourers do reason upon short views, and a very moderate compass of thought. Swift.

DISCOURSE, adj. [from discourse.]

1. Passing by intermediate stops from premises to consequences.

The soul

Reason receives, and reason is her being,

Discursive, or intuitive; discourse

Is ofttest yours, the latter is most ours. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Containing dialogue; interlocutory.

The epic is every where interlaced with dialogue or discursive scenes. Dryden on Dramatic Poësy.

DISCOURTEOUS. adj. [dis and courteous.] Uncivil; uncomplaisant; defective in good manners.

He resolved to unhorse the first discourteous knight he should meet. Motteux's Don Quixote

DISCOURTESY. n. f. [dis and courtesy.] Incivility; rudeness; act of disrespect.

As if cheerfulness had been tediousness, and good entertainment had been turned to discourtesy, he would ever get himself alone. Sidney.

Be calm in arguing; for fierceness makes

Error a fault, and truth discourtesy. Herbert.

He made me many visits, maundering as if I had done him a discourtesy. Wifeman's Surg.

DISCOURTEOUSLY. adv. [from discourteous.] Uncivilly; rudely.

DISCOURS. [from discus, Latin.] Broad; flat; wide. Used by botanists to denote the middle, plain, and flat part of some flowers, such as the flos solis, &c. Quincy.

DISCREDIT. n. f. [decrediter, French.] Ignominy; reproach; lower degree of infamy; disgrace; imputation of a fault.

Had I been the finder out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Idlers will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and then certify over their country to the discredit of a plantation. Bacon.

That they may quit their morals without any discredit to their intellectuals, they fly to several stale, trite, pitiful objections and cavils. South.

'Tis the duty of every christian to be concerned for the reputation or discredit his life may bring on his profession. Rogers.

Alas, the small discredit of a bribe,

Scarce hurts the lawyer, but undoes the scribe. Pope.

TO DISCREDIT. v. a. [decrediter, French.]

1. To deprive of credibility; to make not trusted.

He had fram'd to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life, which I have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die. Shakesp.

2. To disgrace; to bring reproach upon; to shame; to make less reputable or honourable.

You had left unseen a wonderful piece of work, which not to have been blest withal, would have discredited you. Shakesp.

He is commended that makes a saving voyage, and least discredits his travels, who returns the same man he went. Wotton.

He like a privileg'd spy, whom nothing can

Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man. Donne.

Reflect how glorious it would be to appear in countenance of discredited duty, and by example of piety revive the declining spirit of religion. Rogers.

Without care our best actions will lose much of their influence, and our virtues will be often discredited with the appearance of evil. Rogers's Serm.

DISCREET. adj. [discret, French.] Prudent; circumspect; cautious; sober; not rash; not precipitant; not careless; not hardily adventurous.

Honest, discreet, quiet, and godly learned men, will not be withdrawn by you. Whitgift.

Less fearful than discreet,
 You love the fundamental part of state,
 More than you doubt the charge of't. Shakespeare's Coriol.
 To elder years to be discreet and grave,
 Then to old age maturity she gave. Denham.
 It is the discreet man, not the witty, nor the learned, nor the brave, who guides the conversation, and gives measures to society. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 225.

2. Modest; not forward.

Dear youth, by fortune favour'd, but by Love
 Alas! not favour'd less, be still as now
Discreet. Thomson's Summer, l. 1355.
DISCREETLY. adv. [from discreet.] Prudently; cautiously;
 circumspectly.

Poets lose half the praise they should have got,
 Could it be known what they discreetly blot. Waller.
 The labour of obedience, loyalty, and subjection, is no more but for a man honestly and discreetly to fit still. South.
 Profit springs from husks discreetly l. Philips.
 The dullest brain, if gently stirr'd,
 Perhaps may waken to a humming bird;
 The most recluse, discreetly open'd, find
 Congenial object in the cockle kind. Dunciad, b. iv. l. 437.

DISCREETNESS. n. f. [from discreet.] The quality of being discreet; discretion.

DISCREPANCE. n. f. [discrepantia, Latin.] Difference; contrariety; disagreement.

DISCREPANT. adj. [discrepans, Latin.] Different; disagreeing; contrary.

DISCRETE. adj. [discretus, Latin.]

1. Distinct; disjointed; not continuous.

Discrete quantity, or different individuals, are measured by number, without any breaking continuity, that is, in things that have continuity, as continued quantity and motion. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Disjunctive; as, I resign my life, but not my honour, is a discrete proposition.
 3. Discrete proportion is when the ratio between two pairs of numbers or quantities is the same; but there is not the same proportion between all the four: thus, 6:8::3:4. Harris.

DISCRETION. n. f. [from discretio, Latin.]

1. Prudence; knowledge to govern or direct one's self; skill; wise management.

Nothing then was further thought upon for the manner of governing; but all permitted unto their wisdom and discretion which were to rule. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

A knife may be taken away from a child, without depriving them of the benefits thereof, which have years and discretion to use it. Hooker, b. iv. f. 12.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness:
 old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

All this was order'd by the good discretion

Of the right reverend cardinal of York. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

The pleasure of commanding our passions is to be preferred before any sensual pleasure; because it is the pleasure of wisdom and discretion. Tillotson.

But care in poetry must still be had,

It asks discretion, ev'n in running mad. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

There is no talent so useful towards rising in the world, or which puts men more out of the reach of fortune than dis- cretion, a species of lower prudence. Swift.

2. Liberty of acting at pleasure; uncontrolled, and unconditional power; as, he surrenders at discretion; that is, without stipulation.

DISCRETIONARY. adj. [from discretion.] Left at large; unlimited; unrestrained.

A deacon may have a dispensation for entering into orders before he is twenty three years of age, and it is discretionary in the bishop to admit him to that order at what time he thinks fit. Ayliff's Parergon.

The major being a person of consummate experience, was invested with a discretionary power. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup> 61.

DISCRETIVE. adj. [discretus, Latin.]

1. [In logick.] Discretive propositions are such wherein various, and seemingly opposite judgements are made, whose variety or distinction is noted by the particles but, tho', yet, &c.
 as, travellers may change their climate, but not their temper:
Job was patient, tho' his grief was great. Watts's Logic.

2. [In grammar.] Discretive conjunctions are such as imply opposition; as, not a man but a beast.

DISCRIMINABLE. adj. [from discriminate.] Distinguishable by outward marks or tokens. Dict.

TO DISCRIMINATE. v. a. [discrimino, Latin.]

1. To mark with notes of difference; to distinguish by certain tokens from another.

Oysters and cockles and muscles, which move not, have no discriminate sex. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 875.

There are three sorts of it differing in fineness from each other, and discriminated by the natives by three peculiar names. Boyle.

The right hand is discriminated from the left by a natural, necessary, and never to be confounded distinction. South.

Although the features of his countenance be no reason of obedience, yet they may serve to discriminate him from any other person, whom she is not to obey. Stillingfleet.

There may be ways of discriminating the voice; as by acuteness and gravity, the several degrees of rising and falling from one tone or note to another. Holder.

2. To select or separate from others.

You owe little less for what you are not, than for what you are, to that discriminating mercy, to which alone you owe your exemption from miseries. Boyle.

DISCRIMINATENESS. n. f. [from discriminate.] Distinctness; marked difference. Dict.

DISCRIMINATION. n. f. [from discriminatio, Latin.]

1. The state of being distinguished from other persons or things.

There is a reverence left to be shewed them on the account of their discrimination from other places, and separation for sacred uses. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

2. The act of distinguishing one from another; distinction; difference put.

A satire should expose nothing but what is corrigible, and make a due discrimination between those that are, and those who are not the proper objects of it. Addison's Spectator.

By that prudent discrimination made between the offenders of different degrees, he obliges those whom he has distinguished as objects of mercy. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 31.

3. The marks of distinction.

Take heed of abetting any factions, or applying any publick discriminations in matters of religion. King Charles.

Letters arise from the first original discriminations of voice, by way of articulation, whereby the ear is able to judge and observe the differences of vocal sounds. Holder's El. of Speech.

DISCRIMINATIVE. adj. [from discriminate.]

1. That which makes the mark of distinction; characteristical.

The only standing test, and discriminative characteristick of any metal or mineral, must be sought for in the constituent matter of it. Woodward.

2. That which observes distinction.

Discriminative providence knew before the nature and course of all things. More's Antidote against Atheism.

DISCRIMINOUS. adj. [from discrimen, Latin.] Dangerous; hazardous.

Any kind of spitting of blood imports a very discriminous state, unless it happens upon the gaping of a vein opened by a plethory. Harvey on Consumptions.

DISCUBITORY. adj. [discubitorius, Lat.] Fitted to the posture of leaning.

After bathing they retired to bed, and refreshed themselves with a repast; and so that custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into discubitory. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

DISCUMBENCY. n. f. [discumbens, Latin.] The act of leaning at meat, after the ancient manner.

The Greeks and Romans used the custom of discumbency at meals, which was upon their left side; for so their right hand was free and ready for all service. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DISCUMBER. v. a. [dis and cumber.] To disengage from any troublesome weight or bulk.

His limbs discumber'd of the clinging vest,

He binds the sacred cincture round his breast. Pope's Odyss.

TO DISCURE. v. a. [decouvrir, French.] To discover; to reveal. A word perhaps peculiar to Spenser.

I will, if please you it discure, assay

To ease you of that ill. Fairy Queen.

DISCURSIVE. adj. [discursif, French, from discurro, Latin.]

1. Moving here and there; roving.

Some noises help sleep; as the blowing of the wind, and the trickling of water: they move a gentle attention, and whatsoever moveth attention, without too much labour, stilleth the natural and discursive motion of the spirits. Eaton's N. Hist.

2. Proceeding by regular gradation from premises to consequences; argumentative. This is sometimes, perhaps not improperly, written discursive.

There is a sanctity of soul and body, of more efficacy for the receiving of divine truths, than the greatest pretences to discursive demonstration. More's Divine Dialogues.

There hath been much dispute touching the knowledge of brutes, whether they have a kind of discursive faculty, which some call reason. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCURSIVELY. adv. [from discursive.] By due gradation of argument.

We have a principle within, whereby we think, and we know we think; whereby we do discursively, and by way of ratiocination, deduce one thing from another. Hale.

DISCURSORY. adj. [discursor, Latin.] Argumental; rational.

DISCUS. n. f. [Latin.] A quoit; a heavy piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports.

From Elatreus' strong arm the discus flies,

And sings with unmatch'd force along the skies. Pope's Ody.

TO DISCUSS. v. a. [discutio, discussum, Latin.]

1. To examine; to ventilate; to clear by disquisition.

DIS

We are to discuss only those general exceptions which have been taken. Hooker, 'b. iv. f. 1.

His usage was to commit the discussing of causes privately to certain persons learned in the laws. Ayliffe's Parergon.

This knotty point should you and I discuss,
Or tell a tale. Pope.

2. To disperse any humour or swelling.

DISCU'SSER. n. f. [from discuss.] He that discusses; an examiner.

DISCU'SSION. n. f. [from discuss.]

1. Disquisition; examination; ventilation of a question.

Truth cannot be found without some labour and intention of the mind, and the thoughts dwelling a considerable time upon the survey and discussion of each particular. South.

Various discussions tear our heated brain:

Opinions often turn; still doubts remain;

And who indulges thought, increases pain. Prior.

2. [In surgery.] Discussion or resolution is nothing else but breathing out the humours by insensible transpiration. Wiseman.

DISCU'SSIVE. adj. [from discuss.] Having the power to discuss or disperse any noxious matter.

DISCU'TIENT. n. f. [discutiens, Latin.] A medicine that has power to repel or drive back the matter or tumours in the blood, with tendency to separate. It sometimes means the same as carminative. Quincy.

The swellings arising from these require to be treated, in their beginning, with moderate repellents and discutients. Wise.

To DISDAIN. v. a. [dédaigner, French.] To scorn; to consider as unworthy of one's character.

There is nothing so great, which I will fear to do for you; nor nothing so small, which I will disdain to do for you. Sidn.

They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,

Which makes me sweat with wrath. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

What safe and nicely I might well delay

By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Tell him, Cato

Disdains a life which he has power to offer. Addison's Cato.

DISDAIN. n. f. [sdegno, Ital.] Contempt; scorn; contemptuous anger; indignation.

Children being haughty, through disdain and want of nurture, do stain the nobility of their kindred. Ecclus. xxii. 10.

But against you, ye Greeks, ye coward train,

Gods! how my soul is mov'd with just disdain! Pope's Od.

DISDA'INFUL. adj. [disdain and full.] Contemptuous; haughtily scornful; indignant.

There will come a time when three words, uttered with charity and meekness, shall receive a far more blessed reward than three thousand volumes, written with disdainful sharpness of wit. Hooker, Preface.

The queen is obstinate,

Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it,

Disdainful to be tried by't. Shakespeare.

Seek through this grove;

A sweet Athenian lady is in love

With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;

But do it when the next thing he espies

Shall be the lady. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

But those I can accuse, I can forgive:

By my disdainful silence let them live. Dryden.

The disdainful soul came rushing through the wound. Dry.

DISDA'INFULLY. adv. [from disdainful.] Contemptuously; with haughty scorn; with indignation.

Either greet him not,

Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more

Than if not look'd on. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiously, that procures esteem from any one. South.

DISDA'INFULNESS. n. f. [from disdainful.] Contempt; contemptuousness; haughty scorn.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,

With swelling heart, in spite and due disdainfulness,

She lay for dead, 'till I help'd with unlacing her. Sidney.

A proud disdainfulness of other good men in all honest matters. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

DISEASE. n. f. [dis and ease.] Distemper; malady; sickness; morbid state.

What's the disease he means?

—'Tis call'd the evil. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

It is idle to propose remedies before we are assured of the disease, or to be in pain 'till we are convinced of the danger.

Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

Then wasteful forth

Walks the dire power of pestilent disease. Thomf. Summer.

To DISEASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To afflict with disease; to torment with sickness; to make morbid; to infect.

We are all diseased,

And with our surfeiting and wanton hours

Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,

And we must bleed for it. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Flatt'ers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft,

Hug their diseas'd perfumes, and have forgot

DIS

That ever Timon was. Shakespeare's Timon.

Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He was diseased in his feet. 1 Kings xv. 23.

2. To put to pain; to pain; to make uneasy.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not at all disease them. Locke.

DISEASE'DNESS. n. f. [from diseased.] Sickness; morbidness; the state of being diseased.

This is a restoration to some former state; not that state of indigency and diseasedness. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

DISE'GED. adj. [dis and edge.] Blunted; obtunded; dulled.

I grieve myself

To think, when thou shalt be disegd'd by her

Whom now thou tir'st on, how thy memory

Will then be pang'd by me. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To DISEMBA'RK. v. a. [dis and embark.] To carry to land.

I must unto the road, to disembark

Some necessities. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

To DISEMBA'RK. v. n. To land; to go on land.

There disembarking on the green sea-side,

We land our cattle, and the spoil divide. Pope's Odyssey.

To DISEMBIT'TER. v. a. [dis and embitter.] To sweeten; to free from bitterness; to clear from acrimony.

Encourage such innocent amusements as may disembitter the minds of men, and make them mutually rejoice in the same agreeable satisfactions. Addison's Freeholder, No. 34.

DISEMBO'DIED. adj. [dis and embodied.] Divested of their bodies.

To DISEMBO'GUE. v. a. [dise'm'oucher, old French. Skinner.] To pour out at the mouth of a river; to vent.

Rivers

In ample oceans disembogu'd, are lost. Dryden's Ovid.

Rolling down, the steep Timavus raves,

And through nine channels disembogues his waves. Addison.

To DISEMBO'GUE. v. n. To gain a vent; to flow.

By eminences placed up and down the globe, the rivers make innumerable turnings and windings, and at last disembogue in several mouths into the sea. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

DISEMBO'WELLED. participial adj. [dis and embowel.] Taken from out the bowels.

So her disembowell'd web,

Arachne in a hall or kitchen spreads,

Obvious to vagrant flies. Phillips.

To DISEMBRO'IL. v. a. [debruiller, French.] To disentangle; to free from perplexity; to reduce from confusion.

Then earth from air, and seas from earth were driv'n,

And grosser air sunk from ethereal heav'n;

Thus disebroil'd, they take their proper place. Dryden.

The system of his politicks is disebroiled, and cleared of all those incoherences and independent matters that are woven into this motly piece. Addison's Whig Examiner.

To DISENABLE. v. a. [dis and enable.] To deprive of power; to disable; to sink into weakness; to weaken.

Now age has overtaken me; and want, a more insufferable evil, through the change of the times, has wholly disenabled me. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

To DISENCHA'NT. v. a. [dis and enchant.] To free from the force of an enchantment; to deliver from the power of charms or spells.

Alas! let your own brain disenchant you. Sidney.

Muse, stoop thy diseenchanted wing to truth. Denham.

Haste to thy work; a noble stroke or two

Ends all the charms, and diseenchants the grove. Dryden.

To DISENCU'MBER. v. a. [dis and encumber.]

1. To discharge from incumbrances; to free from clogs and impediments; to disburthen; to exonerate.

It will need the actual intention, the particular stress and application of the whole soul, to disencumber and set it free, to scour off its rust, and remove those hindrances which would otherwise clog and check the freedom of its operations. Spratt.

The disencumber'd soul

Dreams look like the amusements of the soul, when she is disencumbered of her machine; her sports and recreations, when she has laid her charge asleep. Spectator, No. 487.

2. To free from obstruction of any kind.

Dim night had disencumber'd heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disencumbered building, in the inside, that I have ever seen; and is esteemed, by many artists, one of the finest works in Italy. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

DISENCU'MBRANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] Freedom from incumbrance.

There are many who make a figure below what their fortune or merit entitles them to, out of mere choice, and an elegant desire of ease and diseincumbrance. Spectator, No. 264.

To DISENGA'GE. v. a. [dis and engage.]

1. To separate from any thing with which it is in union.

Some others, being very light, would float up and down a good while, before they could wholly diseengage themselves and descend. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. To withdraw the affection; to wean; to abstract the mind.
It is requisite that we should acquaint ourselves with God, that we should frequently disengage our hearts from earthly pursuits. Atterbury.

The consideration that should disengage our fondness from worldly things, is, that they are uncertain in their foundation, fading, transient, and corruptible in their nature. Rogers.

3. To disentangle; to clear from impediments or difficulties.

From civil broils he did us disengage;

Found nobler objects for our martial rage. Waller.

In the next paragraph I found my author pretty well disengaged from quotations. Atterbury.

4. To free from any thing that powerfully seizes the attention.

When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,

They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

To DISENGA'GE. v. n. To set one's self free from; to withdraw one's affections from.

Providence gives us notice, by sensible declensions, that we may disengage from the world by degrees. Collier on Thought.

To DISENTA'NGLE. v. a. [dis and entangle.]

1. To set free from impediments; to disembroil; to clear from perplexity or difficulty.

'Till they could find some expedient to explicate and disentangle themselves out of this labyrinth, they made no advance towards supplying their armies. Clarendon, b. viii.

The welfare of their souls requires a better judgment than their own, either to guide them in their duty, or to disentangle them from a temptation. South.

2. To unfold or loose the parts of any thing interwoven with one another.

Though in concretions particles so entangle one another, that they cannot in a short time clear themselves, yet they do incessantly strive to disentangle themselves, and get away. Boyle.

3. To disengage; to separate.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood by us than as a mind free, and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

To DISENTE'RRE. v. a. [dis and enterrer, French.] To unbury; to take out of the grave.

Though the blindness of some fanatics have savaged on the bodies of the dead, and have been so injurious unto worms as to disenterre the bodies of the deceased, yet had they therein no design upon the soul. Brown's Vul. Errors, b. vii. c. 19.

To DISENTHRA'L. v. a. [dis and enthrall.] To set free; to restore to liberty; to rescue from slavery.

But God my soul shall disenthrall;

For I upon his name will call. Sandys.

If religion were false, bad men would set the utmost force of their reason on work to discover that falsity, and thereby disenthrall themselves. South's Sermons.

To DISENTHRO'NE. v. a. [dis and enthroned.] To depose from sovereignty; to dethrone.

Either to disenthrone the king of heav'n

We war, if war be best; or to regain

Our own right lost. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 229.

To DISENTRA'NCE. [dis and entrance.] To awaken from a trance, or deep sleep.

Ralpho, by this time disentranc'd,

Upon his bum himself advanc'd,

Though sorely bruise'd. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

To DISESPO'USE. v. a. [dis and espouse.] To separate after faith plighted.

Such was the rage

Of Turnus, for Lavinia disespous'd. Milton's Parad. Lost.

DISESTE'EM. n. f. [dis and esteem.] Slight regard; a disregard more moderate than contempt.

When any one, by miscarriage, falls into disesteem, he will fall under neglect and contempt. Locke.

To DISESTE'EM. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard slightly; to consider with a slight degree of contempt.

Should Mars see't,

That horrid hurrier of men, or she that betters him,

Minerva, never so incens'd, they could not disesteem. Chapm.

But if this sacred gift you disesteem,

Then cruel plagues shall fall on Priam's state. Denham.

I would not be thought to disesteem or dissuade the study of nature. Locke.

DISESTIMA'TION. n. f. [dis and estimatio, Lat.] Disrespect; disesteem. Dict.

DISFA'VOUR. n. f. [dis and favour.]

1. Discountenance; unpropitious regard; unfavourable aspect; unfavourable circumstance.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavours of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded. Bacon.

2. A state of ungraciousness or unacceptableness; a state in which one is not favoured.

While free from sacrilege, he was at peace, as it were, with God and man; but after his sacrilege, he was in disfavour with both. Spelman.

3. Want of beauty. Dict.

To DISFA'VOUR. v. a. [from the noun.] To discountenance; to withhold or withdraw kindness.

Might not those of higher rank, and nearer access to her majesty, receive her own commands, and be countenanced or disfavoured according as they obey? Swift.

DISFIGURA'TION. n. f. [from disfigure.]

1. The act of disfiguring.

2. The state of being disfigured.

3. Deformity.

To DISFI'GURE. v. a. [dis and figure.] To change any thing to a worse form; to deform; to mangle.

One

To whom you are but as a form in wax

By him imprinted, and within his power

To leave the figure, or disfigure it. Shakespeare.

In this the antique and well-noted face

Of plain old form is much disfigured. Shakesp. King John.

Abject is their punishment,

Disfiguring not God's likeness, but their own,

Or, if his likeness, by themselves defac'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

Uriel once warn'd, pursu'd him down

The way he went, and on the Assyrian mount

Saw him disfigur'd more than could befall

Spirit of happy fort. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 127.

A nose flatter, or a mouth wider, could have consisted, as well as the rest of his figure, with such a soul and such parts as made him, disfigured as he was, capable to be a dignitary in the church. Locke.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain

On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,

To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addis. Cato.

His long absence, and travels which had disfigured him, made him altogether unknown. Pope on Epick Poetry.

DISFI'GUREMENT. n. f. [from disfigure.] Defacement of beauty; change of a better form to a worse.

The disfigurement that travel or sickness has bestowed upon him, is not thought great by the lady of the isle. Suckling.

And they, so perfect is their misery,

Not once perceive their foul disfigurement. Milton's Comus.

To DISFO'REST. v. a. [dis and forest.] To reduce land from the privileges of a forest to the state of common land.

To DISFRA'NCHISE. v. a. [dis and franchise.] To deprive of privileges or immunities.

To DISFU'RNISH. v. a. [dis and furnish.] To deprive; to unfurnish; to strip.

My riches are these poor habiliments,

Of which if you should here disfurnish me,

You take the sum and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

He durst not disfurnish that country either of so great a commander, or of the wonted garrisons. Knolles's History.

To DISGA'RNISH. v. a. [dis and garnish.]

1. To strip of ornaments. Dict.

2. To take guns from a fortress.

To DISGLO'RIFY. v. a. [dis and glorify.] To deprive of glory; to treat with indignity.

So Dagon shall be magnify'd, and God,

Besides whom is no god, compar'd with idols,

Disglorify'd, blasphem'd, and had in scorn. Milt. Agonistes.

To DISGO'RGE. v. a. [degorgere, Fr. from gorge, the throat.]

1. To discharge by the mouth; to spew out; to vomit.

So, so, thou common dog, did'st thou disgorge

Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard?

And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up,

And howl'st to find it. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

From the distant shore they loudly laugh,

To see his heaving breast disgorge the briny draught. Dryden.

2. To pour out with violence.

All th' embossed sores and headed evils,

That thou with licence of free foot hast caught,

Would thou disgorge into the general world. Shakespeare.

The deep-drawing barks do there disgorge

Their warlike freightage. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida, Prol.

They move along the banks

Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge

Into the burning lake their baleful streams. Milt. Par. Lost.

There are scarcely any countries much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not volcanoes, or fiery vents; and these are constantly all in flames, whenever any earthquake happens; they disgorging that fire which, whilst underneath, was the cause of the disaster. Derham's Physico-Theology.

DISGRA'CE. n. f. [disgrace, French.]

1. Shame; ignominy; dishonour.

Like a dull actor now,

I have forgot my part, and I am out

Even to a full disgrace.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Poetry, howsoever censured, is not fallen from the highest stage of honour to the lowest stair of disgrace.

Peacham.

2. State of dishonour.

To such bondage he was for so many courses tied by her, whose disgraces to him were graced by her excellence.

Sidney.

3. State of being out of favour.

To DISGRA'CE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring a reproach upon; to dishonour.

We may not so in any one special kind admire her, that we disgrace her in any other; but let all her ways be according unto their place and degree adored.

Hooker, b. ii. f. i.

Mens passions will carry them far in misrepresenting an opinion, which they have a mind to disgrace.

Burnet.

2. To put out of favour: as, the minister was disgraced.

DISGRA'CEFUL. adj. [disgrace and full.] Shameful; ignominious; reproachful.

Masters must correct their servants with gentleness, prudence, and mercy; not with upbraiding and disgraceful language, but with such only as may express and reprove the fault, and amend the person.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To retire behind their chariots was as little disgraceful then, as it is now to alight from one's horse in a battle.

Pope.

DISGRA'CEFULLY. adv. [from disgraceful.] In disgrace; with indignity; ignominiously.

The senate have cast you forth

Disgracefully, to be the common tale

Of the whole city.

Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

DISGRA'CEFULNESS. n. f. [from disgraceful.] Ignominy.

DISGRA'CE. n. f. [from disgrace.] One that exposes to shame; one that causes ignominy.

I have given good advice to those infamous disgracers of the sex and calling.

Swift.

DISGRA'CIOUS. adj. [dis and gracious.] Unkind; unfavourable.

I do suspect I have done some offence,

That seems disgracious in the city's eye.

Shakesp. Richard III.

To DISGUISE. v. a. [deguiser, French; dis and guise.]

1. To conceal by an unusual dress.

How might we disguise him?

—Alas, I know not: there is no woman's gown big enough for him.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Disguis'd he came; but those his children dear

Their parent soon discern'd, though in disguise.

Milt. P. L.

2. To hide by a counterfeit appearance; to cloak by a false show; as, he disguis'd his anger.

3. To disfigure; to change the form.

They saw the faces, which too well they knew,

Though then disguis'd in death, and smear'd all o'er

With filth obscene, and dropping putrid gore.

Dryd. Æn.

Ulysses wakes, not knowing the place where he was; because Minerva made all things appear in a disguis'd view.

Pope.

4. To deform by liquor: a low term.

I have just left the right worshipful, and his myrmidons, about a sneaker of five gallons: the whole magistracy was pretty well disguis'd before I gave them the slip.

Spectator.

DISGUISE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A dress contrived to conceal the person that wears it.

They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others.

Addison's Spectator, No. 170.

2. A false appearance; counterfeit show.

You see we've burnt our cheeks; and mine own tongue splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antickt us.

Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

A sudden thought then starting in his mind,

Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,

The world may search in vain with all their eyes,

But never penetrate through this disguise.

Dryden's Fables.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,

False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises.

Pope.

DISGUISEMENT. n. f. [from disguise.] Dress of concealment.

Under that disguisement I should find opportunity to reveal myself to the owner of my heart.

Sidney.

The marquis thought best to dismask his beard, and told him, that he was going covertly to take a secret view of the forwardness of his majesty's fleet, then in preparation: this did somewhat handsomely heal the disguisement.

Wotton.

DISGUISER. n. f. [from disguise.]

1. One that puts on a disguise.

I hope he is grown more disengaged from his intentness on his own affairs, which is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dextrous disguiser.

Swift.

2. One that conceals another by a disguise; one that disfigures.

Death's a great disguiser.

Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

DISGU'ST. n. f. [degout, French.]

1. Aversion of the palate from any thing.

2. Ill-humour; malevolence; offence conceived.

The manner of doing is of more consequence than the

VOL. I.

DIS

thing done, and upon that depends the satisfaction or disgust wherewith it is received.

Locke.

Thence dark disgust and hatred, winding wiles,

Coward deceit, and ruffian violence.

Thomson's Spring.

To DISGU'ST. v. a. [degouter, French; degusto, Latin.]

1. To raise aversion in the stomach; to distaste.

2. To strike with dislike; to offend. It is variously constructed with at or with.

If a man were disgusted at marriage, he would never recommend it to his friend.

Atterbury.

Those unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered.

Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

3. To produce aversion: with from.

What disgusts me from having to do with answer-jobbers is, that they have no conscience.

Swift.

DISGU'STFUL. adj. [disgust and full.] Nauseous; that which causes aversion.

I have finished the most disgustful task that ever I undertook.

Swift.

DISH. n. f. [disc, Saxon; dysc, Erse; discus, Latin.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which solid food is served up at the table.

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,

And lays the mangled morsels in a dish.

Dryden.

I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularity in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end on which the sacrifice was laid.

Addis.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,

His few books, or his beads, or maple dish;

Or do his grey hairs any violence?

Milton.

A ladle for our silver dish

Is what I want, is what I wish.

Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;

Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,

Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds.

Shakesp. Jul. Cæs.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,

One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,

With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none.

Sh. Cymb.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite

Makes eating a delight;

And if I like one dish

More than another, that a pheasant is.

Suckling.

The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of.

Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.

Locke.

To DISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To serve in a dish; to send up to table.

For conspiracy,

I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd

For me to try.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISH-CLOUT. n. f. [dish and clout.] The cloath with which the maids rub their dishes.

A dish-clout of Jaquenetta's, he wears next his heart for a favour.

Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

Send them up to their masters with a dish-clout pinned at their tails.

Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DISH-WASHER. n. f. [dish and washer.] The name of a bird.

DISHABILLE. adj. [deshabille, French.] Undressed; loosely or negligently dressed.

Queens are not to be too negligently dressed or dishabille.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DISHABILLE. n. f. Undress; loose dress.

A woman, who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabille.

Clarissa.

To DISHA'BIT. v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakespeare.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,

By the compulsion of their ordinance,

By this time from their fixed beds of lime

Had been dishabited, and wide havock made.

Shakesp. K. Lear.

DISHA'RMONY. n. f. [dis and harmony.] Contrary to harmony.

To DISHEA'RTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.]

1. To discourage; to deject; to terrify; to depress.

To dishearten with fearful sentences, as tho' salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not in our understanding so consonant with christian charity.

Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

Be not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks,

That wont to be more cheerful and serene.

Milt. Par. Lost.

Yet neither thus dishearten'd nor dismay'd,

The time prepar'd I waited.

Milton.

It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends.

Stillingfleet's Pref. to Def. Rom. Id.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it. Tillotson, Serm. i.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends, or even the fears of our disheartened enemies. Atterbury.
DISHE'RISON. n. f. [dis and herison.] The act of debarring from inheritance.

To DISHE'RIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from hereditary succession; to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited. Spencer's Past.

How they were rank'd shall rest untold by me,

With nameless nymphs that liv'd in ev'ry tree;

Nor how the Dryads and the woodland train,

Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain. Dryden's Fab.

To DISHE'VEL. v. a. [décheveler, French.] To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,

With garments rent and hair dishevelled,

Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan. Sp. Fa. Qu.

After followed great numbers of women weeping, with dishevelled hair, scratching their faces and tearing themselves after the manner of the country. Knolles.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,

And mourning matrons with dishevel'd hair. Dryd. Æneid.

The flames involv'd in smok

Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,

Caught her dishevel'd hair and rich attire. Dryden's Æneid.

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,

Saw his arm lock'd in her dishevel'd hair. Smith's Ph. Hip.

DIS'HING. adj. [from dis.] Concave; a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheels, some make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and felloes more outwards. Mortimer's Husband.

DISHO'NEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

To-morrow will we be married—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed by a glozing appetite, for an utile or jucundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence. South's Sermons.

He lays it down as a principle, that right or wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws and not by nature. Locke.

2. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,

Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears. Dryden.

3. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,

Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire,

A dreadful series of intestine wars,

Inglorious triumphs and dishonest scars. Pope's Windsor For.

DISHO'NESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]

1. Without faith; without probity; faithlessly; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,

Tho' most dishonestly he doth deny it. Shakesp. Com. Err.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.

A wife daughter shall bring an inheritance to her husband; but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness. Ecc. xxii. 4.

DISHO'NESTY. n. f. [from dishonest.]

1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty must be to their disadvantage. Swift.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?—Heav'n be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Shakespeare.

DISHO'NOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,

But mine own safeties. Shakespeare's Macb. th.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him in that despicable condition the glorious title of his friend. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

'Take him for your husband and your lord,

'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace

On one descended from a royal race. Dryden's Fables.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever

Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life

She never knew harm-doing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

To DI-HO'NOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

Make known,

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,

No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,

That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakesp.

This no more dishonours you at all,

Than to take in a town with gentle words,

Which else would put you to your fortune. Shakesp. Cor.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judged wise of all; but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all. Ecc. xxvi. 26.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

If I, celestial fire! in ought

Have serv'd thy will, or gratify'd thy thought,

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,

Grac'd for the little time he has to live:

Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;

His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands. Dryd. Iliad.

DISHO'NOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful, reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find

Those articles which did our state decrease. Dan. Civ. War.

2. In a state of neglect or disesteem.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty. Ecc. x. 31.

DISHO'NOURER. n. f. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods

It would be, to ensnare an irreligious

Dishonourer of Dagon. Milton's Agon. l. 857.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHO'RN. v. a. [dis and horn.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishorn the spirit,

And mock him home to Windsor. Shakesp. M. Wive Wind.

DISHU'MOUR. n. f. [dis and humour.] Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishumour, are also criminal. Speclator, N<sup>o</sup>. 424.

DISIMPROVEMENT. n. f. [dis and improvement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth. Norris.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations for thirty years past have been real disimprovements. Swift.

To DISINCARCERATE. n. f. [dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm, or subtilizing air, to melt and open the surface of the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies. Harvey on the Plague.

DISINCLINATION. n. f. [from disincline.] Want of affection; slight; dislike; ill will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible. Arb. and Pope.

To DISINCLINE. v. a. [dis and incline.] To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige. Clarendon.

DISINGENUITY. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work. Clarendon.

DISINGENUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenuous.] Unfair; meanly artful; viciously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age

Of idleness, who all our pow'rs engage

In the same studies, the same course to hold,

Nor think our reason for new arts too old. Denham.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning their church, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions. Stillingfleet.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and misbecoming any one who pretends to be a rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason and the conviction of clear arguments. Locke.

DISINGENUOUSLY. adv. [from disingenuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

DISINGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Mean subtilty; unfairness; low craft.

I might press them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance. Government of the Tongue, f. 3.

DISINHERISON. n. f. [dis and inherit.] The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent and even oppose such disinherison. Clarendon.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherison or great injuries to the lawful children. Taylor.

TO DISINHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit

The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars, and thou fair moon,

Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,

And disinherit chaos that reigns here

In double night of darkness, and of slander. Milton.

Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony,

That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able

To waste it all myself, and leave ye none;

So disinherited, how would ye bless

Me, now your curse! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 571.

Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication. South's Sermons.

TO DISINTER. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take out of the grave.

The philosopher, the faint, or the hero, the wise, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred. Addis. Spect.

DISINTERESTED. n. f. [dis and intereffe, French.] It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly.] Without regard to private advantage; not biased by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here,

When general, old, disinterested, and clear. Dryden.

DISINTERESTMENT. n. f. [dis and interessment, French.] Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word like charges in the same sentence, is merely gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with entire disinteressment.

Prior's Postscript.

DISINTEREST. n. f. [dis and interest.]

1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome. Glanville.

2. Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest.] Superior to regard of private advantage; not influenced by private profit.

My lord, as disinterested as you appear to the world, I am convinced, that no man is more in the power of prevailing favourite passion than yourself. Swift.

3. Without any concern in an affair; without fear or hope.

DISINTERESTEDLY. adv. [from disinterested.] In a disinterested manner.

DISINTERESTEDNESS. n. f. [from disinterested.] Contempt of private interest; neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner. Brown.

TO DISINTRICATE. v. a. [dis and intricate.] To disentangle.

TO DISINVI'ITE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation.

TO DISJOIN. v. a. [dejoindre, French; dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to disunite; to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise

Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin. Milton's P. Lost.

Left different degree

Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce

Deity for thee, when fate will not permit. Milton. P. Lost.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd

Together we had liv'd: ev'n not in death disjoin'd. Dryd.

Never let us lay down our arms against France till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

TO DISJOINT. v. a. [dis and joint.]

1. To put out of joint.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,

And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sandy's Paraph.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame,

But mangle and disjoint the brittle frame,

More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Pr.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a cement.

Mould'ring arches, and disjointed columns. Irene.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate.

Rotation must disperse in air,

All things which on the rapid orb appear;

And if no power that motion should controul,

It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackmore.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts's Improv'm. of the Mind.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Sidney, b. ii.

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy,

The images her troubled fancy forms

Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

TO DISJOINT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer,

Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DISJOINT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided.

Young Fortinbras,

Holding a weak supposal of our worth;

Thinks, by our late dear brother's death,

Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shakesp. Hamlet.

DISJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judgment; determination; perhaps only mistaken for dijudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudications we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Latin.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJUNCTION. n. f. [from disjunctio, Latin.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may

Enjoy your mistress now, from whom, you see,

There's no disjunction to be made, but by

Your ruin. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical, or spiritual part, justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Latin.]

1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. i. c. 2.

2. That which marks separation or opposition; as I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.

3. [In logic.] A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles; as, It is either day or night: The weather is either shiny or rainy: Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true; but the two first are not strictly true, because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining. Watt's Logick.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive; as, The earth moves in a circle, or an ellipse; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipse. Watt's Logick.

DISJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united.

Causes of the Decay of Piety.

DISK. n. f. [discus, Latin.]

1. The face of the sun, or any other planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phæbus, when he climbs on high,

Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton.

Mercury's disk

Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,

Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson's Summer.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the antient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew's Cosm. Sac. b. i. c. 5.

In areas vary'd with mosaic art,

Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope's Od.

DISKINDNESS. n. f. [dis and kindness.] Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

DISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disinclination; absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well

Their contrary dislikes with loved means,

Did place them all in order, and compel

To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,

Together link'd with adamant chains. Spencer.

Your dislikes to whom I would be pleasing,

Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakesp.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thoughts, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South's Sermons.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy than upon reason. L'Estrange.

The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Addis.

2. Discord; dissention; disagreement. This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose

That shew'd dislike among the christian peers. Fairfax.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill-will or disgust.

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;

What like, offensive. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo

The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denh. Prol. Sophy.

Whosoever dislikes the digressions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLIKEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To make unlike.

Muffle your face,

Dismantle you; and, as you can, dislike

The truth of your own seeming. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISLIKENESS. n. f. [dis and likeness.] Dissimilitude; not resemblance; unlikeness.

That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeness to it; and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLIKE. n. f. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift's Intell.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. Diet.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought

The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct

As water is in water. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

To DISLOCATE. v. a. [dis and locus, Latin.]

1. To put out of the proper place.

The strata seemed to have been dislocated, borne from their original site, and distanced by some external power. Woodw.

After some time the strata were broken on all sides of the globe, that they were dislocated, and their situation varied, being elevated in some places, and depressed in others. Woodw.

2. To put out of joint; to disjoint.

Were't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,

They're apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISLOCATION. n. f. [from dislocate.]

1. The act of shifting the places of things.

2. The state of being displaced.

The posture of rocks, often leaning or prostrate, shews that they had some dislocation from their natural site. Burnet.

3. A luxation; a violent pressure of a bone out of the socket; a joint put out.

It might go awry either within or without the upper, as often as it is forcibly pulled to it, and so cause a dislocation, or a strain. Grew's Museum.

To DISLODGE. v. a. [dis and lodge.]

1. To remove from a place.

The shell-fish which are resident in these places live and die there, and are never dislodged or removed by storms, nor cast upon the shores, which the littorales usually are. Woodward.

2. To remove from an habitation.

Those senses lost, behold a new defeat,

The soul dislodging from another seat. Dryden's Juv.

3. To drive an enemy from a station.

My sword can perfect what it has begun,

And from your walls dislodge that haughty son. Dryd. Aur.

4. To remove an army to other quarters.

The ladies have prevail'd,

The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcus gone. Shakespeare's Cor.

To DISLODGE. v. n. To go away to another place.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour,

Friendliest to sleep, and silence, he resolv'd

With all his legions to dislodge. Milton's Par. Lost.

DISLOYAL. adj. [disloyal, French; dis and loyal.]

1. Not true to allegiance; faithless; false to a sovereign; disobedient.

Foul distrust, and breach

Disloyal on the part of man; revolt

And disobedience. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 7.

2. Dishonest; perfidious. Obsolete.

Such things, in a false disloyal knave,

Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,

They're cold delations working from the heart,

That passion cannot rule. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Not true to the marriage-bed.

The lady is disloyal.

—Disloyal! The word is too good to paint out her wickedness. Shakespeare.

Disloyal town!

Speak, did'st not thou

Forfake thy faith, and break the nuptial vow? Dryden.

4. False in love; not constant. The three latter senses are now obsolete.

DISLOYALLY. adv. [from disloyal.] Not faithfully; treacherously; disobediently.

DISLOYALTY. n. f. [from disloyal.]

1. Want of fidelity to the sovereign.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to judgment, not in the disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

2. Want of fidelity in love. A sense now obsolete.

There shall appear such seeming truths of Hero's disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance. Sh. Much Ado about Noth.

DISMAL. adj. [dies malus, Latin, an evil day.] Sorrowful; dire; horrid; melancholy; uncomfortable; unhappy; dark.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other view the dismal effects of it. Dec. of Piety.

DISMALLY. adv. [from dismal.] Horribly; sorrowfully; uncomfortably.

DISMALNESS. n. f. [from dismal.] Horror; sorrow.

To DISMANTLE. v. a. [dis and mantle.]

1. To throw off a dress; to strip.

He that makes his prince despised and undervalued, and beats him out of his subjects hearts, may easily strip him of his other garbisons, having already dispossessed him of his strongest, by dismantling him of his honour, and seizing his reputation. South's Sermons.

2. To loose; to unfold; to throw open.

This is most strange!

That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,

Dearest and best, should in this trice of time

Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle

So many folds of favour. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To strip a town of its outworks.

It is not sufficient to possess our own fort, without the dismantling and demolishing of our enemies. Hakewill on Provid.

4. To break down any thing external.

His eyeballs, rooted out, are thrown to ground;

His nose dismantled, in his mouth is found;

His jaws, cheeks, front, one undistinguish'd wound. Dry.

To DISMASK. v. a. [dis and mask.] To divest of a mask; to uncover from concealment.

Fair ladies mask'd, are roses in the bud;

Or angels veil'd in clouds: are roses blown,

Dis-mask'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn. Shakespeare.

The marquis had no leisure to laugh, but thought best to dismask his beard; and so told him, that he was going covertly. Wotton.

To DISMAY. v. a. [desmayar, Spanish.] To terrify; to discourage; to affright; to depress; to deject.

Their mighty strokes their haberjeons dismay'd. Fai. Qu.

Enemies would not be so troublesome to the western coasts, nor that country itself would be so often dismayed with alarms as they have of late years been. Raleigh's Essays.

He will not fail thee; fear not, neither be dismayed. Deutr.

Nothing can make him remiss in the practice of his duty, no prospect of interest can allure him, no fear of danger dismay him. Atterbury's Sermons.

DISMAY. n. f. [desmayo, Spanish.] Fall of courage; terror felt; desertion of mind; fear impressed.

All sat mute,

Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each

In others countenance read his own dismay. Mit. Par. Lost.

This then not minded in dismay, yet now

Assures me that the bitterness of death

Is past. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 156.

DISMAYEDNESS. n. f. [from dismay.] Dejection of courage; dispiritedness.

The valiantest feels inward dismayedness, and yet the fearfullest is ashamed fully to shew it. Sidney, b. ii.

DISME. n. f. [French.] A tenth; the tenth part; tythe.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Ev'ry tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dismes,

Hath been as dear as Helen. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The pope began to exercise his new rapines here in England, by a compliance with the said king Edward, in granting him two years disme from the clergy. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIS

TO DISMEMBER. v. a. [dis and member.] To divide member from member; to dilacerate; to cut in pieces.

I am with both, each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl afunder, and dismember me. Shakesp. King John.
O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar! But, alas!
Cæsar must bleed for it. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering, like a vulture, to devour, or dismember its dying carcass. Swift.

Fowls obscene dismember'd his remains,
And dogs had torn him on the naked plains. Pope's Odyssey.
Those who contemplate only the fragments or pieces of science, dispersed in short unconnected discourses, without relation to each other, can never survey an entire body of truth, but must always view it as deformed and dismembered. Watts.

TO DISMISS. v. a. [dimissus, Latin.]

1. To send away.

We commit thee thither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him. Shakesp. Henry IV.
He dismissed the assembly. Acts xix. 41.

2. To give leave of departure.

If our young Iulus be no more,
Dismiss our navy from your friendly shore. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

3. To discard; to divest of an office.

DISMISSIO. n. f. [from dimissio, Latin.]

1. Dispatch; act of sending away.

So pois'd, so gently she descends from high,
It seems a soft dismissio from the sky. Dryd. Hind and Pant.

2. An honourable discharge from any office or place.

Not only thou degrad'st them, or remit'st
To life obscure, which were a fair dismissio;
But throw'st them lower than thou didst exalt them high.

3. Deprivation; obligation to leave any post or place.

You must not stay here longer; your dismissio
Is come from Cæsar. Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

TO DISMORTGAGE. v. a. [dis and mortgage.] To redeem from mortgage.

He dismortgaged the crown demesnes, made an increase of munition, arms and treasure, and left behind a mass of gold. Hewel's Vocal Forrest.

TO DISMOUNT. v. a. [demonter, French.]

1. To throw off an horse.

From this flying steed unrein'd, as once
Bellerophon, though from a lower clime,
Dismounted, on th' Aleian field I fall. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To throw from any elevation or place of honour.

3. To throw cannon from its carriage.

The Turks artillery, planted against that tower, was, by the skilfulness of the Christian cannoneers, in short time dismounted with shot from the tower, and many of the gunners slain. Knolles's History of the Turks.

TO DISMOUNT. v. n.

1. To alight from an horse.

When he came within sight of that prodigious army at Agincourt, he ordered all his cavalry to dismount, and implore upon their knees a blessing. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 49.

TO DISNATURALISE. v. a. [dis and naturalise.] To alienate; to make alien; to deprive of the privileges of birth.

DISNATURED. adj. [dis and nature.] Unnatural; wanting natural tenderness; devoid of natural affection.

If she must teem,

Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shak. K. Lear.

DISOBEDIENCE. n. f. [dis and obedience.]

1. Violation of lawful commands or prohibition; breach of duty due to superiours.

Th' offence is holy that she hath committed,
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or unduteous title. Shak. M. W. of Winds.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, sing heav'nly muse. Milton.

Murder, adultery, or disobedience to parents, have a general notion antecedently to laws. Stillingsfleet.

This is not disobedience, but rebellion; 'tis disclaiming the sovereignty of Christ, and renouncing all allegiance to his authority. Rogers, Sermon 4.

2. Incompliance.

If planetary orbs the sun obey,
Why should the moon disown his sovereign sway;
Why in a whirling eddy of her own
Around the globe terrestrial should she run?

This disbedience of the moon will prove
The sun's bright orb does not the planets move. Blackmore.

DISOBEDIENT. adj. [dis and obedient.] Not observant of lawful authority; guilty of the breach of lawful commands or prohibition.

The man of God was disobedient unto the word of the Lord. 1 Kings xiii. 26.

VOL. I.

DIS

TO DISPART. v. a. [dis and part; departir, French; dispartior, Latin.] To divide in two; to separate; to break; to burst; to rive.

The gate nor wood, nor of enduring brass,
But of more worthy substance framed was;
Doubly disparted, it did lock and close,
That when it locked, none might through it pass. Fai. Qu.

On either side
Disparted chaos overbuilt exclaim'd,
And with rebounding furge the bars assail'd,
That scorn'd his indignation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

The rest to several places
Disparted, and between spun out the air. Milt. Par. Lost.

Disparted Britain mourn'd their doubtful sway,
And dreaded both, when neither would obey. Prior.

The pilgrim oft,
At dead of night, 'mid his orison, hears
Aghast, the voice of time disparting tow'rs. Dier.

DISPASSION. n. f. [dis and passion.] Freedom from mental perturbation; exemption from passion.

What is called by the Stoicks apathy, or dispassion, is called by the Scepticks indisturbance, by the Molenists quietism, by common men peace of conscience. Temple.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have overcome all difficulties. Dryden's Æne. Ded. cat.

Amidst all the honours that are paid him, he feels nothing in himself but a poor, weak, dispirited mortal, yielding to the laws of corruption. Rogers, Sermon 5.

2. To exhaust the spirits; to oppress the constitution of the body.

He has dispirited himself by a debauch, and drank away his good humour. Collier.

DISPIRITEDNESS. n. f. [from dispirit.] Want of vigour; want of vivacity. Dict.

TO DISPLACE. v. a. [dis and place.]

1. To put out of place; to place in another situation.

2. To put out of any state, condition, office, trust, or dignity.

To displace any who are in, upon displeasure, is by all means to be avoided, unless there be a manifest cause for it. Bacon.

Abdal, who commands

The city, is the prince's friend, and therefore

Must be displac'd, and thou shalt strait succeed him. Denh.

A religion established by God himself, should not be displaced by any thing, under a demonstration of that divine power that first introduced it. South's Sermons.

One then may be displac'd, and one may reign;

And want of merit render birthright vain. Dryd. Aurengz.

2. To disorder.

You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,

With most admir'd disorder. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DISPLACEMENT. n. f. [displacement, Latin.]

1. Incivility; disobligation.

2. Disgust; any thing displeasing.

The displacements that he receives, by the consequences of his excess, far outweigh all that is grateful in it. Dec. of Piety.

TO DISPLANT. v. a. [dis and plant.]

1. To remove a plant.

2. To drive a people from the place in which they have fixed their residence.

All those countries, which, lying near unto any mountains, or Irish deserts, had been planted with English, were shortly displanted and lost. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Plantations are amongst ancient, primitive, and heroical works: when the world was young, it begat more children; for I may justly account new plantations to be the children of former kingdoms: I like a plantation in a pure soil; that is, where people are not displanted. Bacon's Essays.

DISPLANTATION. n. f. [from dis and plantatio.]

1. The removal of a plant.

2. The ejection of a people.

The Edenites were garrisoned to resist the Assyrians, whose displantation Senacherib vaunted of. Raleigh.

TO DISPLAY. v. a. [deplier, desployer, French.]

1. To spread wide.

The

- The northern wind his wings did broad display
At his command, and reared him up light. Fairy Queen.
Say, how this instrument of love began;
And in immortal strains display the fan. Gay.
2. To exhibit to the sight or mind.
You speak not like yourself, who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd th' effects
Of disposition gentle. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Thou heav'n's alternate beauty can'st display,
The blush of morning, and the milky way. Dryden.
The works of nature, and the words of revelation, display truth to mankind in characters so visible, that those, who are not quite blind, may read. Locke.
The storm the dark Lycæan groves display'd,
And first to light expos'd the sacred shade. Pope's Statius.
3. To carve; to cut up.
He carves, displays, and cuts up to a wonder. Spectator.
4. To talk without restraint.
The other messenger,
Whose welcome I perceiv'd had poison'd mine,
Being the very fellow which of late
Display'd so faucily against your highness. Shakesp. K. Lear.
5. To set ostentatiously to view.
They are all couched in a pit, hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakesp.
DISPLA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.] An exhibition of any thing to view.
Our enobled understandings take the wings of the morning to visit the world above us, and have a glorious display of the highest form of created excellencies. Glanv. Sceps. c. 2.
We can with the greatest coldness behold the stupendous displays of omnipotence, and be in transports at the puny effays of human skill. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 626.
DISPLE'ASANCE. n. f. [from displease.] Anger; discontent;
Obsolete.
Cordell said, she lov'd him as behov'd;
Whose simple answer wanting colours fair
To paint it forth, him to displeasance mov'd. Fairy Queen.
DISPLEA'SANT. adj. [from displease.] Unpleasing; offensive; unpleasant.
What to one is a most grateful odour, to another is noxious and displeasing; and it were a misery to some to lie stretched on a bed of roses. Glanv. Sceps. c. 15.
TO DISPLE'ASE. v. a. [dis and please.]
1. To offend; to make angry.
God was displeased with this thing. 1 Chron. xxi. 7.
Your extreme fondness was perhaps as displeasing to God before, as now your extreme affliction. Temple.
2. To disgust; to raise aversion.
Foul sights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things, than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul sights do not much offend.
Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 275.
Sweet and stinking commonly serve our turn for these ideas, which, in effect, is little more than to call them pleasing or displeasing; though the smell of a rose and violet, both sweet, are certainly very distinct ideas. Locke.
DISPLE'ASINGNESS. n. f. [from displeasing.] Offensiveness; quality of offending.
It is a mistake to think that men cannot change the dis- pleasingness or indifference, that is in actions, into pleasure and desire, if they will do but what is in their power. Locke.
DISPLE'ASURE. n. f. [from displease.]
1. Uneasiness; pain received.
When good is proposed, its absence carries displeasure or pain with it. Locke.
2. Offence; pain given.
Now shall I be more blameless than the Philistines, though
I do them a displeasure. Judg. xv. 3.
3. Anger; indignation.
True repentance may be wrought in the hearts of such as fear God, and yet incur his displeasure, the deserved effect whereof is eternal death. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
He should beware that, by the fame of such a fact, he did not provoke Solyman's heavy displeasure against him. Knolles.
Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 109.
Though the reciprocalness of the injury ought to allay the displeasure at it, yet men so much more consider what they suffer than what they do. Decay of Piety.
On me alone thy just displeasure lay;
But take thy judgments from this mourning land. Dryden.
Y' have shewn how much you my content design;
Yet, ah! would heaven's displeasure pass like mine. Dryden.
Nothing is in itself so pernicious to communities of learned men as the displeasure of their prince, which those may justly expect to feel who would make use of his favour to his own prejudice. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 33.
4. State of disgrace; state in which one does obtain discountenance; disfavour.

- He went into Poland, being in displeasure with the pope for overmuch familiarity. Peacham on Musick.
TO DISPLE'ASURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To displease; not to gain favour; not to win affection. A word not elegant, nor now in use.
When the way of pleasuring or displeasuring lieth by the favourite, it is impossible any other should be overgreat. Bacon.
TO DISPLO'DE. v. a. [displodo, Latin.] To disperse with a loud noise; to vent with violence.
In view
Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displode their second fire
Of thunder. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 605.
DISPLO'SION. n. f. [from displodus, Lat.] The act of disloding; a sudden burst or dispersion with noise and violence.
DISPO'RT. n. f. [dis and sport.] Play; sport; pastime; diversion; amusement; merriment.
She list not hear, but her disports pursu'd;
And ever bade him stay, 'till time the tide renew'd. Fai. Qu.
His disports were ingenuous and manlike, whereby he always learned somewhat. Hayward on Edward VI.
She busied, heard the sound
Of rustling leaves; but minded not, as us'd
To such disport before her through the field. Milt. P. Lost.
TO DISPO'RT. v. a. [from the noun.] To divert.
He often, but attended with weak guard,
Comes hunting this way to disport himself. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
TO DISPO'RT. v. n. To play; to toy; to wanton.
Fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub
Disporting! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 518.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew;
The glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew,
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever mingling dyes. Pope.
DISPO'SAL. n. f. [from dispose.]
1. The act of disposing or regulating any thing; regulation; dispensation; distribution.
Tax not divine disposal; wisest men
Have err'd, and by bad women been deluded. Milt. Agon.
2. The power of distribution; the right of bestowing.
I am called off from publick dissertations by a domestick affair of great importance, which is no less than the disposal of my sister Jenny for life. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 75.
Are not the blessings both of this world and the next in his disposal? Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Government; management; conduct.
We shall get more true and clear knowledge by one rule, than by taking up principles, and thereby putting our minds into the disposals of others. Locke.
TO DISPO'SE. v. a. [disposer, French; dispono, Latin.]
1. To employ to various purposes; to diffuse.
Thus whilst she did her various pow'r dispose,
The world was free from tyrants, wars, and woes. Prior.
2. To give; to place; to bestow.
Yet see, when noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Of what you gathered, as most your own, you have dis- posed much in works of publick piety. Spratt's Sermons.
3. To turn to any particular end or consequence.
Endure, and conquer; Jove will soon dispose,
To future good, our past and present woes. Dryden's Virgil.
4. To adapt; to form for any purpose.
These, when the knights beheld, they 'gan dispose Themselves to court, and each a damsel chose. Fai. Queen.
But if thee list unto the court to throng,
And there to haunt after the hoped prey,
Then must thou thee dispose another way. Hulberd's Tale.
5. To frame the mind; to give a proper propension; to incline.
Suspensions dispose kings to tyranny, husbands to jealousy, and wise men to irresolution and melancholy. Bacon's Essays.
The memory of what they had suffered, by being without it, easily disposed them to do this. Clarendon, b. viii.
He knew the seat of Paradise,
And, as he was dispos'd, could prove it
Below the moon, or else above it. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.
This disposes men to believe what it teaches, to follow what it advises. Temple.
A man might do this now, if he were maliciously disposed, and had a mind to bring matters to extremity. Dryd. Spa. Fry.
This may dispose me, perhaps, for the reception of truth;
but helps me not to it. Locke.
Although the frequency of prayer and fasting may be of no efficacy to dispose God to be more gracious, yet it is of great use to dispose us to be more objects of his grace. Smalridge.
If mere moralists find themselves disposed to pride, lust, intemperance, or avarice, they do not think their morality concerned to check them. Swift.
6. To regulate; to adjust.

- Wak'd by the cries, th' Athenian chief arose,
The knightly forms of combat to dispose. Dryden's Fables.
7. To DISPOSE of. To apply to any purpose; to transfer to any other person or use.
All men are naturally in a state of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possessions and persons as they think fit, within the bounds of the law of nature. Locke.
Dispose of the meat with the butler, or any other crony. Sw.
8. To DISPOSE of. To put into the hands of another.
As she is mine, I may dispose of her;
Which shall be either to this gentleman,
Or to her death. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
I have disposed of her to a man of business, who will let her see, that to be well dressed in good humour, and chearful in her family, are the arts and sciences of female life. Tatler.
9. To DISPOSE of. To give away.
A rural judge dispos'd of beauty's prize. Waller.
10. To DISPOSE of. To employ to any end.
The lot is cast unto the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord. Prov. xvi. 33.
They must receive instructions how to dispose of themselves when they come, which must be in the nature of laws unto them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
11. To DISPOSE of. To place in any condition.
For the remaining doubt,
What to resolve, and how dispose of me,
Be warn'd to cast that useless care aside. Dryden's Fables.
12. To DISPOSE of. To put away by any means.
They require more water than can be found, and more than can be disposed of, if it was found. Burnet's Th. of Earth.
- To DISPOSE. v. n. To bargain; to make terms. Obsolete.
When she saw you did suspect
She had dispos'd with Cæsar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, she sent word she was dead. Shakespeare.
- DISPOSE*. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Power; management; disposal.
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose;
My goods, my lands, my reputation. Shakespeare.
It shall be my task
To render thee the Parthian at dispose. Milton's Parad. Reg.
Of all your goodness leaves to our dispose,
Our liberty's the only gift we chuse. Dryden's Indian Emp.
2. Distribution; act of government.
All is best, though oft we doubt
What th' unsearchable dispose
Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton's Agonistes.
3. Disposition; cast of behaviour. Obsolete.
He hath a person, and a smooth dispose,
To be suspected; fram'd to make women false. Shak. Othello.
4. Disposition; cast of mind; inclination. Obsolete.
He carries on the stream of his dispose Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressid.
- DISPOSE*. n. f. [from dispose.]
1. Distributer; giver; bestower.
The magistrate is both the beggar and the disposer of what is got by begging. Graunt's Bill of Mortality.
2. Governor; regulator; director.
I think myself obliged, whatever my private apprehensions may be of the success, to do my duty, and leave events to their disposer. Boyle.
All the reason of mankind cannot suggest any solid ground of satisfaction, but in making that God our friend, who is the absolute disposer of all things. South's Sermons.
Would I had been disposer of thy stars,
Thou shouldst have had thy wish, and died in wars. Dryd.
3. One who gives to whom he pleases.
But brandish'd high, in an ill omen'd hour,
To thee, proud Gaul, behold thy justest fear,
The master sword, disposer of thy pow'r. Prior.
- DISPOSITION*. n. f. [from dispositio, Latin.]
1. Order; method; distribution.
Touching musical harmony, whether by instrument or voice, it being of high and low, in due proportionable disposition, such notwithstanding is the force thereof, and so very pleasing effects it hath, in that very part of man, which is most divine, that some have been thereby induced to think, that the soul itself by nature is, or hath in it harmony. Hooker.
Under this head of invention is placed the disposition of the work, to put all things in a beautiful order and harmony, that the whole may be of a piece. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.
I ask whether the connection of the extremes be not more clearly seen, in this simple and natural disposition, than in the perplexed repetitions and jumble of five or six syllogisms. Locke.
2. Natural fitness; quality.
Refrangibility of the rays of light is their disposition to be refracted, or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton's Opt.
3. Tendency to any act or state.
This argueth a great disposition to putrefaction in the soil and air. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 69.

- Bleeding is to be used or omitted according to the symptoms which affect the brain: it relieves in any inflammatory disposition of the coat of the nerve. Arbuthnot on Diet.
4. Temper of mind.
I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villanous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear. Shakespeare.
Lester had been
The thwartings of your disposition, if You had not shew'd them how you were dispos'd,
'Ere they lack'd power to cross you. Shakespeare. Corio'anus.
5. Affection of kindness or ill-will.
I take myself to be as well informed as most men in the dispositions of each people towards the other. Swift.
6. Predominant inclination.

Disposition is when the power and ability of doing any thing is forward, and ready upon every occasion to break into action. Locke.
The love we bear to our friends is generally caused by our finding the same disposition in them which we feel in ourselves. Pope.
- DISPOSITIVE*. adj. [from dispose.] That which implies disposal of any property; decretive.
The words of all judicial acts are written narratively, unless it be in sentences wherein dispositive and enacting terms are made use of. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- DISPOSITIVELY*. adv. [from dispositive.]
1. In a dispositive manner.
2. Respecting individuals; distributively.
That axiom in philosophy, that the generation of one thing is the corruption of another, although it be substantially true, concerning the form and matter, is also dispositively verified in the efficient or producer. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
- DISPOSITOR*. n. f. [from dispose.] The lord of that sign in which the planet is, and by which therefore it is over-ruled.
- To DISPOSSESS. v. a. [dis and possess.]
1. To put out of possession; to deprive; to disseize.
The blow from saddle forced him to fly;
Else might it needs down to his manly breast
Have cleft his head in twain, and life thence dispossest. F. 2.
Thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossest the soul of thy grandame. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Let us sit upon the ground, and tell
How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they dispossest'd. Shakespeare. R. II.
I will chuse
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossest her all. Shakespeare's Timon.
In thee I hope; thy succours I invoke,
To win the crown whence I am dispossest'd;
For like renown awaiteth on the stroke,
To cast the haughty down, or raise th' oppress'd. Fairfax.
The children went to Gilead, and took it, and dispossest the Amorite which was in it. Numb. xxxii. 39.
By their aid
This inaccessible high strength, the seat
Of deity supreme, us dispossest'd,
He trusted to have seiz'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
Restless Amata lay,
Fir'd with disdain for Turnus dispossest,
And the new nuptials of the Trojan guest. Dryden's Æn.
2. It is generally used with of before the thing taken away.

No pow'r shall dispossest
My thoughts of that expected happiness. Denham.
O, fairest of all creatures, last and best
Of what heav'n made, how art thou dispossest'd
Of all thy native glories! Dryden's State of Innocence.
Nothing can create more trouble to a man than to endeavour to dispossest him of this conceit. Tillotson, Serm. ii.
3. Formerly with from.
They arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over their brethren, and quite dispossest
Concord and law of nature from the earth. Milt. Par. Lost.
It will be found a work of no small difficulty to dispossest and throw out a vice from that heart, where long possession begins to plead prescription. South's Sermons.
- DISPOSURE*. n. f. [from dispose.]
1. Disposal; government; power; management.
In his disposure is the orb of earth,
The throne of kings, and all of human birth. Sandys.
They quietly surrendered both it and themselves to his disposure. Sandys's Journey.
Whilst they murmur against the present disposure of things, they do tacitly desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 11.

2. State; posture.

They remained in a kind of warlike disposure, or perhaps little better. Wotton.

DISPRAISE. n. f. [dis and praise.] Blame; censure; dishonour.

If I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him. Shakespeare.

To me reprobach
Rather belongs, distrust, and all dispraise. Mit. Par. Lost.

Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breasts; no weakness, no contempt,
Dispraise or blame. Milton's Agonistes, l. 1723.

I need not raise
Trophies to thee from other mens dispraise. Denham.
Looks fright not men: the general has seen Moors
With as bad faces; no dispraise to Bertran's. Dryd. Sp. Fry.

If any writer shall do this paper so much honour as to inscribe the title of it to others, the whole praise or dispraise of such a performance will belong to some other author. Addison.

My faults will not be hid, and it is no dispraise to me that they will not: the cleanness of one's mind is never better proved than in discovering its own faults. Pope.

TO DISPRAISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To blame; to censure; to condemn.

In praising Anthony, I have disprais'd Cæsar. Shakesp.

No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none: I disprais'd him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him; in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

The criticks, while they like my wares, may dispraise my writing. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 288.

DISPRAISER. n. f. [from dispraise.] A censurer; one who blames. Dict.

DISPRAISABLE. adj. [from dispraise.] Unworthy of commendation. Dict.

DISPRAISINGLY. adv. [from dispraise.] With blame; with censure.

Michael Cassio!

That came a wooing with you; many a time,
When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,

Hath ta'en your part. Shakespeare's Othello.

TO DISPREAD. v. a. [dis and spread.] To spread different ways. In this word, and a few others, dis has the same force as in Latin composition, and means, different ways; in different directions.

As morning sun her beams dispreaden clear,
And in her face fair truth and mercy doth appear. Fa. Qu.

Over him, art striving to compare
With nature, did an arbour green dispread,

Framed of wanton ivy, flowing fair,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread
His pricking arms, entrail'd with roses red. Fairy Queen.

Above, below, around, with art dispread,
The sure inclosure folds the genial bed. Pope's Odyssey.

DISPROFIT. n. f. [dis and profit.] Loss; damage; detriment. Dict.

DISPROOF. n. f. [dis and proof.] Confutation; conviction of error or falshood.

His remark contains the grounds of his doctrine, and offers at somewhat towards the disproof of mine. Atterbury.

I need not offer any thing farther in support of one, or in disproof of the other. Rogers, Sermon. 14.

TO DISPROPERT. v. a. [dis and property.] To dispossess of any property. Dict.

DISPROPORTION. n. f. [dis and proportion.] Unsuitableness in quantity of one thing, or one part of the same thing, to another; want of symmetry.

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,
Whereto we see in all things nature tends:

Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural. Shakespeare's Othello.

Reasoning, I oft admire
How nature, wise and frugal, could commit
Such disproportions; with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,

Greater, so many fold to this one use. Milton's Par. Lost.

Perhaps from greatness, state, and pride,
Thus surprised, she may fall:

Sleep does disproportion hide,
And, death resembling, equals all. Waller.

For their strength,
The disproportion is so great, we cannot but Expect a fatal consequence. Denham's Sophy.

What, did the liquid to th' assembly call,
To give their aid to form the pond'rous ball?

First, tell us, why did any come? next why
In such a disproportion to the dry? Blackmore's Creation.

That we are designed for a more exalted happiness, than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vast disproportion to the desires and capacities of our soul. Rogers, Sermon. 5.

TO DISPROPORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To mismatch; to join things unsuitable in quantity.

There fits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part. Shak. Henry VI. p. iii.

Distance and mens fears have so enlarged the truth, and so disproportioned every thing, that we have made the little troop of discontents a gallant army, and already measure by the evening shadow. Suckling.

Musick craveth your acquaintance: many are of such disproportioned spirits, that they avoid her company. Peacham.

We on earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, 'till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime. Milton.

DISPROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsuitable in quantity; not duly regulated in regard to something else.

Doubts and fears are the sharpest passions: through these false opticks all that you see is like the evening shadows, disproportionable to the truth, and strangely longer than the true substance. Suckling.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the disproportionable differences of season. Brown.

We are apt to set too great a value on temporal blessings, and have too low and disproportionable esteem of spiritual. Smal.

There is no wine of so strong a body as to bear such a disproportionable quantity of water as sixty parts. Pope's Od. Notes.

DISPROPORTIONABLENESS. n. f. [from disproportionable.] Unsuitableness to something else.

DISPROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from disproportion.] Unsuitably; not symmetrically.

DISPROPORTIONATE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsymmetrical; unsuitable to something else either in bulk or value.

None of our members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest, either in excess or defect. Ray.

It is plain that men have agreed to a disproportionate and unequal possession of the earth. Locke.

DISPROPORTIONATELY. adv. [from disproportionate.] Unsuitably; unsymmetrically.

DISPROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from disproportionate.] Unsuitableness in bulk or value.

TO DISPROVE. v. a. [dis and prove.]

1. To confute an assertion; to convict of error or falshood.

This exposition they plainly disprove, and shew by manifest reason, that of David the words of David could not possibly be meant. Hooker.

This Westmoreland maintains,
And Warwick shall disprove it. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.

Arcite with disdain,
In haughty language, thus reply'd again:
Forsworn thyself; the traitor's odious name
I first return, and then disprove thy claim. Dryden's Fables.

It is easier to affirm than to disprove. Holder's Elements.

That false supposition I advanced in order to disprove it, and by that means to prove the truth of my doctrine. Atterbury's Sermons, Pref.

We see the same assertions produced again, without notice of what hath been said to disprove them. Swift.

2. To convict a practice of error.

They behold those things disproved, disannulled, and rejected, which use had made in a manner natural. Hooker, b. iv.

If God did not forbid all indifferent ceremonies, then our conformity with the church of Rome in some such is not hitherto as yet disproved, although papists were unto us as heathens were unto Israel. Hooker, b. iv. f. 6.

DISPROVER. n. f. [from disprove.]

1. One that disproves or confutes.

2. One that blames; a censurer, if the following passage be not ill printed for disapprover.

The single example that our annals have yielded of two extremes, within so short time, by most of the same commanders and disprovers, would require no slight memorial. Wotton.

DISPUNISHABLE. adj. [dis and punishable.] Without penal restraint.

No leases of any part of the said lands shall ever be made, other than leases for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder, and not dispunishable of waste. Swift's last Will.

TO DISPURSE. v. a. [dis and purse.] To pay; to disburse. It is not certain that the following passage should not be written disburse.

Many a pound of my own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispursed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

DISPUTABLE.

DISPUTABLE. adj. [from dispute.]

1. Liable to contest; controvertible; that for which something may be alleged on opposite sides.

If they are not in themselves disputable, why are they so much disputed? South.

2. Lawful to be contested.

Until any point is determined to be a law, it remains disputable by every subject. Swift.

DISPUTANT. n. s. [from dispute; disputans, Latin.] A controvertist; an arguer; a reasoner.

Our disputants put me in mind of the skuttle-fish, that when he is unable to extricate himself, blackens all the water about him 'till he becomes invisible. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 476.

DISPUTANT. adj. Disputing; engaged in controversy.

Thou there wast found

Among the gravest rabbies, disputant

On points and questions fitting Moses' chair. Milt. Pa. Reg.

DISPUTATION. n. s. [from disputatio, Latin.]

1. The skill of controversy; argumentation.

Consider what the learning of disputation is, and how they are employed for the advantage of themselves or others, whose business is only the vain ostentation of sounds. Locke.

2. Controversy; argumental contest.

Well do I find, by the wise knitting together of your answer, that any disputation I can use is as much too weak as I unworthy. Sidney, b. ii.

'Till some admirable or unusual accident happens, as it hath in some, to work the beginning of a better alteration in the mind, disputation about the knowledge of God commonly prevails little. Hooker, b. v.

DISPUTATIOUS. adj. [from dispute.] Inclined to dispute; cavilling.

A man must be of a very disputatious temper, that enters into state-controversies with any of the fair sex. Add. Freehold.

DISPUTATIVE. adj. [from dispute.] Disposed to debate; argumentative.

Perhaps this practice might not so easily be perverted as to raise a cavilling, disputative, and sceptical temper in the minds of youth. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

TO DISPUTE. v. n. [disputo, Latin.] To contend by argument; to altercate; to debate; to argue; to controvert.

If attempts of the pen have often proved unfit, those of the sword are more so, and fighting is a worse expedient than disputing. Decay of Piety.

The atheist can pretend no obligation of conscience, why he should dispute against religion. Tillotson, Serm. ii.

Did not Paul and Barnabas dispute with vehemence about a very little point of conveniency? Atterbury.

TO DISPUTE. v. a.

1. To contend for, whether by words or action.

Things were disputed before they came to be determined: men afterwards were not to dispute any longer, but to obey. Hooker.

So dispute the prize,

As if you fought before Cydaria's eyes. Dryd. Ind. Emperor.

One says the kingdom is his own: a Saxon drinks the quart, and swears he'll dispute that with him. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 75.

2. To oppose; to question.

Now I am sent, and am not to dispute

My prince's orders, but to execute. Dryden's Ind. Emperor.

3. To discuss; to think on: a sense not in use.

Dispute it like a man.

— I shall do so:

But I must also feel it as a man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DISPUTE. n. s. [from the verb.] Contest; controversy; argumental contention.

The question being about a fact, it is begging it, to bring as a proof an hypothesis which is the very thing in dispute. Loc.

The earth is now placed so conveniently, that plants thrive and flourish in it, and animals live: this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute. Bentley's Sermons.

DISPUTELESS. adj. [from dispute.] Undisputed; uncontrovertible. Dict.

DISPUTER. n. s. [from dispute.] A controvertist; one given to argument and opposition.

My common illness utterly disqualifies me for all conversation; I mean my deafness. Swift.

2. To deprive a right or claim by some positive restriction; to disable; to except from any grant

The church of England is the only body of Christians which disqualifies those, who are employed to preach its doctrine, from sharing in the civil power, farther than as senators. Swift on the Sacramental Test.

TO DISQUANTITY. v. a. [dis and quantity.] To lessen; to diminish.

Be entreated of fifty to disquantity your train;

And the remainders that shall still depend,

To be such men as may befit your age. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

DISQUIET. n. s. [dis and quiet.] Uneasiness; restlessness; want of tranquillity; vexation; disturbance; anxiety.

He that, upon a true principle, lives without any disquiet of thought, may be said to be happy. L'Estrange's Fables.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet. Tillotson.

I had rather live in Ireland than under the frequent disquiets of hearing you are out of order. Swift.

DISQUIET. adj. Unquiet; uneasy; restless.

I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet;

The meat was well, if you were so content. Shakespeare.

TO DISQUIET. v. a. [from the noun.] To disturb; to make uneasy; to harass; to vex; to fret; to deprive of tranquillity.

The proud Roman him disquieted,

A warlike Cæsar, tempted with the name

Of this sweet island. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10. Stan. 47.

Why art thou so vexed, O my soul? And why art thou so disquieted within me? Psalms i.

By anger and impatience the mind is disquieted, and is not able easily to compose itself to prayer. Duppa.

Thou, happy creature, art secure

From all the torments we endure;

Despair, ambition, jealousy,

Lost friends, nor love disquiets thee. Roscommon.

DISQUIETER. n. s. [from disquiet.] A disturber; a harasser.

DISQUIETLY. adv. [from disquiet.] Without rest; anxiously; uneasily; without calmness.

He rested disquietly that night; but in the morning I found him calm. Wise man's Surgery.

DISQUIETNESS. n. s. [from disquiet.] Uneasiness; restlessness; anxiety; disturbance.

All otherwise, said he, I riches rede,

And deem them root of all disquietness. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Arius won to himself, both followers and great defenders; whereupon much disquietness ensued. Hooker, b. v. f. 49.

DISQUIETUDE. n. s. [from disquiet.] Uneasiness; anxiety; disturbance; want of tranquillity.

Little happiness attends a great character, and to a multitude of disquietudes the desire of it subjects an ambitious mind. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 256.

'Tis the best preservative from all those temporal fears and disquietudes, which corrupt the enjoyment, and embitter the lives of men. Rogers, Sermon i.

DISQUISITION. n. s. [disquisitio, Latin.] Examination; disputative enquiry.

God hath reserved many things to his own resolution, whose determinations we cannot hope from flesh; but with reverence must suspend unto that great day, whose justice shall either condemn our curiosity, or resolve our disquisitions. Brown.

'Tis indeed the proper place for this disquisition concerning the antediluvian earth, and it could not well have been brought in before. Woodward's Natural History.

The royal society had a good effect, as it turned many of the greatest geniuses of that age to the disquisitions of natural knowledge. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 267.

The nature of animal diet may be discovered by taste, and other sensible qualities, and some general rules, without particular disquisition upon every kind. Arbutnot.

TO DISRANK. v. a. [dis and rank.] To degrade from his rank. Dict.

DISREGARD. n. s. [dis and regard.] Slight notice; neglect; contempt.

TO DISREGARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To slight; to neglect; to contemn.

Since we are to do good to the poor, to strangers, to enemies, those whom nature is too apt to make us despise, disregard, or hate, then undoubtedly we are to do good to all. Spratt's Sermons.

Those fasts which God hath disregarded hitherto, he may regard for the time to come. Smalridge's Sermons.

Studious of good, man disregarded fame,

And useful knowledge was his eldest aim. Blackmore.

DIS

DISREGARDFUL. adj. [disregard and full.] Negligent; contemptuous.

DISRE'lish. n. f. [dis and rel'ish.]

1. Bad taste; nauseousness.

Of they assay'd,

Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft

With hatefulest disrelish, writh'd their jaws,

With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

2. Dislike of the palate; squeamishness.

Bread or tobacco may be neglected, where they are shewn not to be useful to health, because of an indifferency or disrelish to them. Locke.

To DISRE'lish. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make nauseous; to infect with an unpleasant taste.

Fruits of taste to please

True appetite, and not disrelish thirst

Of nectarous draughts between, from milky stream. Milt.

The same anxiety and solicitude that embittered the pursuit, disrelishes the fruition itself. Rogers, Sermon 19.

2. To want a taste of; to dislike.

The world is become too busy for me: every body is so concerned for the publick, that all private enjoyments are lost, or disrelished. Pope.

DISREPUTA'TION. n. f. [dis and reputation.]

1. Disgrace; dishonour.

I will tell you what was the course in the happy days of queen Elizabeth, whom it is no disreputation to follow. Bacon.

2. Loss of reputation; ignominy.

The king fearing lest that the bad success might discourage his people, and bring disreputation to himself, forbade any report to be made. Hayward.

Gluttony is not of so great disreputation amongst men as drunkenness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

DISREPU'TE. n. f. [dis and repute.] Ill character; dishonour; want of reputation.

How studiously did they cast a slur upon the king's person, and bring his governing abilities under a disrepute. South.

DISRESPE'CT. n. f. [dis and respect.] Incivility; want of reverence; irreverence; an act approaching to rudeness.

Any disrespect to acts of state, or to the persons of statesmen, was in no time more penal. Clarendon.

Aristotle writ a methodical discourse concerning these arts, chusing a certain benefit before the hazard that might accrue from the vain disrespects of ignorant persons. Wilkins.

What is more usual to warriors than impatience of bearing the least affront or disrespect? Pope.

DISRESPE'CTFUL. adj. [disrespect and full.] Irreverent; uncivil.

DISRESPE'CTFULLY. adv. [from disrespectful] Irreverently; uncivilly.

We cannot believe our posterity will think so disrespectfully of their great grandmothers, as that they made themselves monstrous to appear amiable. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 127.

To DISRO'BE. v. a. [dis and robe.] To undress; to uncover; to strip.

Thus when they had the witch disrobed quite,

And all her filthy feature open shown,

They let her go at will, and wander ways unknown. F. Qu.

Kill the villain strait,

Disrobe him of the matchless monument,

Thy father's triumph o'er the savages. Shakesp. King John.

These two great peers were disrobed of their glory, the one by judgment, the other by violence. Watton.

Who will be prevailed with to disrobe himself at once of all his old opinions, and pretences to knowledge and learning, and turn himself out stark naked in quest afresh of new notions. Locke.

DISRUPTION. n. f. [diruptio, Latin.] The act of breaking asunder; a breach; rent; dilaceration.

This secures them from disruption, which they would be in danger of, upon a sudden stretch or contortion. Ray.

The agent which effected this disruption, and dislocation of the strata, was seated within the earth. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

If raging winds invade the atmosphere,

Their force its curious texture cannot tear,

Nor make disruption in the threads of air. B'ackmore.

DISSA'TISFACTION. n. f. [dis and satisfaction.] The state of being dissatisfied; discontent; want of something to compleat the wish.

He that changes his condition, out of impatience and dissatisfaction, when he has tried a new one, wishes for his old again. L'Estrange.

The ambitious man has little happiness, but is subject to much uneasiness and dissatisfaction. Addison's Spectator.

In vain we try to remedy the defects of our acquisition, by varying the object: the same dissatisfaction pursues us through the circle of created goods. Rogers, Sermon 5.

DISSA'TISFACTORINESS. n. f. [from dissatisfactory.] Inability to give content.

DIS

DISSATISFA'CTORY. adj. [from dissatisfy.] That which is unable to give content.

To DISSA'TISFY. v. a. [dis and satisfy.]

1. To discontent; to displease.

The advantages of life will not hold out to the length of desire; and, since they are not big enough to satisfy, they should not be big enough to dissatisfy. Celcier.

2. To fail to please; to want something requisite.

I still retain some of my notions, after your lordship's having appeared dissatisfied with them. Locke.

To DISSE'CT. v. a. [disseco, Latin.]

1. To cut in pieces. It is used chiefly of anatomical enquiries, made by separation of the parts of animal bodies.

No mask, no trick, no favour, no reserve;

Dissect your mind, examine every nerve. Rescommon.

Following life in creatures we dissect,

We lose it in the moment we detect. Pope.

2. To divide and examine minutely.

This paragraph, that has not one ingenuous word throughout, I have dissected for a sample. Atterbury.

DISSE'CTION. n. f. [dissectio, Lat.] The act of separating the parts of animal bodies; anatomy.

She cut her up; but, upon the disssection, found her just like other hens. L'Estrange.

I shall enter upon the disssection of a coquet's heart, and communicate particularities observed in that curious piece of anatomy. Addison's Spectator.

Such strict enquiries into nature, so true and so perfect a disssection of human kind, is the work of extraordinary diligence. Granville.

To DISSE'IZE. v. a. [dissaisier, French.] To dispossess; to deprive.

He so dissseized of his griping grofs,

The knight his thrillant spear again assay'd,

In his brags-plated body to emboss. Fairy Queen, b. i.

If a prince should give a man, besides his ancient patrimony, which his family had been dissseized of, an additional estate, never before in the possession of his ancestors, he could not be said to re-establish lineal succession. Locke.

DISSE'ISIN. n. f. [from dissaisir, French.] An unlawful dispossessing a man of his land, tenement, or other immoveable or incorporeal right. Cowel.

DISSE'IZOR. n. f. [from dissseize.] He that disposses another.

To DISSE'MBLE. v. a. [dissimulo, Latin; semblance, disssemblance, and probably disssembler, in old French.]

1. To hide under false appearance; to conceal; to pretend that not to be which really is.

Your son Lucentio

Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,

Or both disssemble deeply their affections. Shakespeare.

She answered, that her soul was God's; and touching her faith, as she could not change, so she would not disssemble it. Hayward.

2. To pretend that to be which is not. This is not the true signification.

In vain, on the disssembl'd mother's tongue,

Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung;

And real care in vain, and native love

In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

To DISSE'MBLE. v. n. To play the hypocrite.

Ye disssembled in your hearts when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, pray for us. Jer. xlii. 20.

I would disssemble with my nature, where

My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd

I should do so in honour. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I am curtail'd of this fair proportion,

Cheated of feature by disssembling nature,

Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakesp. Richard III.

Thy function too will varnish o'er our arts,

And sanctify disssembling. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

DISSE'MBLER. n. f. [from disssemble.] An hypocrite; a man who conceals his true disposition.

Thou dost wrong me, thou disssembler, thou. Shakesp.

The French king, in the business of peace, was the greater disssembler of the two. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such an one, whose virtue forbiddeth him to be base and a disssembler, shall evermore hang under the wheel. Raleigh.

The queen, with rage inflam'd,

Thus greets him, Thou disssembler, wouldst thou fly

Out of my arms by stealth. Denham.

Men will trust no farther than they judge a person for sincerity fit to be trusted: a discovered disssembler can achieve nothing great and considerable. South's Sermons.

DISSE'MBLINGLY. adv. [from disssemble.] With dissimulation; hypocritically.

They might all have been either disssemblingly spoken, or falsely reported of the equity of the barbarous king. Knolles.

To DISSE'MINATE. v. a. [dissimino, Latin.] To scatter as seed; to sow; to spread every way.

Ill uses are made of it many times in stirring up seditions, rebellions, in dissseminating of heresies, and infusing of prejudices. Hammond's Fundamentals.

There

There is a nearly uniform and constant fire or heat disseminated throughout the body of the earth. Woodward's N. Hist.

The Jews are indeed disseminated through all the trading parts of the world. Addison's Spectator, No. 425.

By firmness of mind, and freedom of speech, the gospel was disseminated at first, and must still be maintained. Atterb.

DISSEMINATION. n. f. [disseminatio, Lat.] The act of scattering like seed; the act of sowing or spreading.

Though now at the greatest distance from the beginning of error, yet we are almost lost in its dissemination, whose ways are boundless, and confess no circumscription. Brown.

DISSEMINATOR. n. f. [disseminator, Lat.] He that scatters; a scatterer; a sower; a spreader.

Men, vehemently thirsting after a name in the world, hope to acquire it by being the disseminators of novel doctrines.

Decay of Piety.

DISSENSION. n. f. [disSENSio, Latin.] Disagreement; strife; discord; contention; difference; quarrel; breach of union.

Friend now, fast sworn,

Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, whose exercise,

Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love,

Unseparable, shall within this hour,

On a disSENSion of a doit, break out

To bitterest enmity.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,

That no disSENSion hinder government. Shakesp. Henry VI.

He appeased the disSENSion then arising about religion. Knolles.

Grown

In wealth and multitude, factious they grow;

But first among the priests disSENSion springs. Milt. Pa. Lost.

Debates, disSENSions, uproars are thy joy;

Provok'd without offence, and practis'd to destroy. Dryden.

DISSENSIOUS. adj. [from disSENSion.] Disposed to discord; quarrelsome; factious; contentious.

Either in religion they have a disSENSious head, or in the commonwealth a factious head. Afham's Schoolmaster.

Who are they that complain unto the king

That I am stern? They love his grace but lightly,

That fill his ears with such disSENSious rumours. Shak. R. III.

You disSENSious rogues,

That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,

Make yourselves scabs?

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

TO DISSENT. v. n. [disSENSio, Latin.]

1. To disagree in opinion; to think in a contrary manner.

Let me not be any occasion to defraud the publick of what is best, by any morose or perverse disSENSings. King Charles.

What cruelty, in the most barbarous rites of heathens, has not been matched by the inhumanity of disSENSing christians?

Decay of Piety.

There are many opinions in which multitudes of men disSENS from us, who are as good and wise as ourselves. Addison.

2. To differ; to be of a contrary nature.

We see a general agreement in the secret opinion of men, that every man ought to embrace the religion which is true, and to shun, as hurtful, whatsoever disSENSeth from it, but that most which doth farthest disSENS. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.

DISSENT. n. f. [from the verb.] Disagreement; difference of opinion; declaration of difference of opinion.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are grounds to suspect that there is proof as considerable to be produced on the contrary side, there suspense or disSENS are voluntary actions. Locke.

What could be the reason of this general disSENS from the notion of the resurrection, seeing that almost all of them did believe the immortality of the soul? Bentley's Sermons.

DISSENTA'NEOUS. adj. [from disSENS.] Disagreeable; inconsistent; contrary.

DISSENTER. n. f. [from disSENS.]

1. One that disagrees, or declares his disagreement from an opinion.

They will admit of matter of fact, and agree with disSENSers in that; but differ only in assigning of reasons. Locke.

2. One who, for whatever reasons, refuses the communion of the English church.

DISSERTA'TION. n. f. [disSertatio, Latin.] A discourse; a disquisition; a treatise.

Plutarch, in his disSertation upon the poets, quotes an instance of Homer's judgment in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

TO DISSE'RVE. v. a. [dis and serve.] To do injury to; to mischief; to damage; to hurt; to harm.

Having never done the king the least service, he took the first opportunity to disserve him, and engaged against him from the beginning of the rebellion. Clarendon.

Desires of things of this world, by their tendency, promote or disserve our interests in another. Rogers, Sermon 2.

DISSE'RVICE. n. f. [dis and service.] Injury; mischief; ill turn.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto relaters who have well deserved. Brown.

Great sicknesses make a sensible alteration, but smaller indispositions do a proportionable disService. Collier on Hu. Reason.

VOL. I.

DISSE'RVICEABLE. adj. [from disService.] Injurious; mischievous; hurtful.

DISSE'RVICEABLENESS. n. f. [from disServiceable.] Injury; harm; hurt; mischief; damage.

All action being for some end, and not the end itself, its aptness to be commanded or forbidden must be founded upon its serviceableness or disServiceableness to some end. Norris.

TO DISSE'TTLE. v. a. [dis and settle.] To unsettle; to unfix.

TO DISSE'VER. v. a. [dis and sever.] In this word the particle dis makes no change in the signification, and therefore the word, though supported by great authorities, ought to be ejected from our language.] To part in two; to break; to divide; to sunder; to separate; to disunite.

Shortly had the storm so dissevered the company, which the day before had tarried together, that most of them never met again, but were swallowed up. Sidney, b. ii.

The dissevering of fleets hath been the overthrow of many actions. Raleigh's Essays.

All downright rains dissever the violence of outrageous winds, and level the mountainous billows. Raleigh.

Dissever your united strengths,

And part your mingled colours once again. Shak. K. John.

The meeting points the sacred hair dissever

From the fair head, for ever and for ever.

Pope.

DISSILI'TION. n. f. [disSilio, Latin.] The act of bursting in two; the act of starting different ways.

The air having much room to receive motion, the disSiliation of that air was great. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

DISSI'MILAR. adj. [dis and similar.] Unlike; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into disSimilar parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from sallet-oil. Boyle.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible I call simple, homogeneal, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and disSimilar. Newton's Opt.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those disSimilar parts can have a like situation. Bentley's Sermons.

DISSIMILA'RITY. n. f. [from disSimilar.] Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its energy in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of disSimilarity must repel these beings from their centre; so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre, and the principle of disSimilarity forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable. Cheyne.

DISSIMI'LITUDE. n. f. [disSimitudo, Lat.] Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous disSimitudes, and by reason thereof jealousies, heartburnings, jars and discords. Hooker.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any utter disSimitude, either with Egyptians, or any other nation. Hooker, b. iv. f. 6.

The disSimitude between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means whereby to worship God. Stillingsfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

As humane society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain disSimitudes. Grew.

Women are curious observers of the likeness of children to parents, that they may, upon finding disSimitude, have the pleasure of hinting unchastity. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

DISSIMULA'TION. n. f. [disSimulatio, Latin.] The act of dissembling; hypocrisy; fallacious appearance; false pretensions.

DisSimulation is but a faint kind of policy; for it asketh a strong wit, and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Bacon, Essay 6.

He added not; and Satan, bowing low

His grey disSimulation, disappear'd

Into thin air diffus'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

DisSimulation may be taken for a bare concealment of one's mind, in which sense we commonly say, that it is prudence to dissemble injuries. South's Sermons.

DISSIPA'BLE. adj. [from disSipate.] Easily scattered; liable to dispersion.

The heat of those plants is very disSipable, which under the earth is contained and held in; but when it cometh to the air it exaleth. Bacon's Natural History.

The parts of plants are very tender, as consisting of corpuscles which are extremely small and light, and therefore the more easily disSipable. Woodward's Natural History.

TO DISSIPATE. v. a. [disSipatus, Latin.]

1. To scatter every way; to disperse.

The heat at length grows so great, that it again disSipates and bears off those very corpuscles which before it brought.

Woodward's Natural History.

The circling mountains eddy in,

From the bare wild, the dissipated storm. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To scatter the attention.

This slavery to his passions produced a life irregular and dissipated.

Savage's Life.

The wherry that contains

Of dissipated wealth the poor remains.

London.

DISSIPATION. n. f. [dissipatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dispersion.

The effects of heat are most advanced when it worketh upon a body without loss or dissipation of the matter. Bacon.

Abraham was contemporary with Paleg, in whose time the famous dissipation of mankind and distinction of languages happened.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Where the earth contains nitre within it, if that heat which is continually steaming out of the earth be preserved, its dissipation prevented, and the cold kept off by some building, this alone is ordinarily sufficient to raise up the nitre. Woodward.

2. The state of being dispersed.

Now

Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout. Milt. Par. Lost.

3. Scattered attention.

I have begun two or three letters to you by snatches, and been prevented from finishing them by a thousand avocations and dissipations.

Swift.

To DISSOCIATE. v. a. [dissocio, Latin.] To separate; to dis-unite; to part.

In the dissociating action, even of the gentlest fire, upon a concrete, there does perhaps vanish, though undiscernedly, some active and fugitive particles, whose presence was requisite to contain the concrete under such a determinate form. Boyle.

DISSOLVABLE. adj. [from dissolve.] Capable of dissolution; liable to be melted.

Such things as are not dissolvable by the moisture of the tongue, act not upon the taste.

Newton's Opt.

DISSOLUBLE. adj. [dissolubilis, Latin.] Capable of separation of one part from another by heat or moisture.

Nodules, reposed in those cliffs amongst the earth, being hard and not so dissoluble, and likewise more bulky, are left behind.

DISSOLUBILITY. n. f. [from dissoluble.] Liableness to suffer a disunion of parts by heat or moisture; capacity of being dissolved.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of alteration, or corruption, from the dissolubility of their parts, and the coadition of several particles endued with contrary and destructive qualities each to other.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To DISSOLVE. v. a. [dissolve, Latin.]

1. To destroy the form of any thing by disuniting the parts with heat or moisture; to melt; to liquefy.

The whole terrestrial globe was taken all to pieces, and dissolved at the deluge.

Woodward's Nat. Hist. Preface.

And beat our watch and rob our passengers;

While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,

Takes on the point of honour, to support

So dissolute a crew. Shakespeare's Richard II.

A man of little gravity, or abstinence in pleasures; yea, sometimes almost dissolute.

Hayward.

They cool'd in zeal,

Thenceforth shall practise how to live secure,

Worldly, or dissolute, on what their lords

Shall leave them to enjoy. Milt. n's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The true spirit of religion banishes indeed all levity of behaviour, all vicious and dissolute mirth; but, in exchange, fills the mind with a perpetual serenity.

Addison's Spectator.

The beauty of religion the most dissolute are forced to acknowledge.

Rogers's Sermons.

DISSOLUTELY. adv. [from dissolute.] Loosely; in debauchery; without restraint.

Whereas men have lived dissolutely and unrighteously, thou hast tormented them with their own abominations.

Wisd. xii.

DISSOLUTENESS. n. f. [from dissolute.] Looseness; laxity of manners; debauchery.

If we look into the common management, we shall have reason to wonder, in the great dissoluteness of manners which the world complains of, that there are any footsteps at all left of virtue.

Locke.

DISSOLUTION. n. f. [dissolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of liquefying by heat or moisture.

2. The state of being liquefied.

3. The state of melting away; liquefaction.

And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou wert destraught and mad with terror? Sh. R. III.

It would burst forth; but I recover breath,
And sense distraet, to know well what I utter. Milt. Agonist.

He possesses a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distraeted with immoderate cares. Ray.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, how would a perpetual noise distraet us? We should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep or meditate than in the middle of a sea-fight. Locke.

5. To make mad.

Wherefore throng you hither?

—To fetch my poor distraeted husband hence:

Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery. Shakesf. Com. of Err.

Better I were distraet,

So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,
And woes, by wrong imagination, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

She was unable, in strength of mind, to bear the grief of his decease, and fell distraeted of her wits. Bacon's Hen. VII.

DISTRESS. n. f. [destrasse, French.]

1. The act of making a legal seizure.
2. A compulsion in real actions, by which a man is assured to appear in court, or to pay a debt or duty which he refused. Cow.

When any one was indebted to another, he would first demand his debt; and, if he were not paid, he would straight go and take a distress of his goods and cattle, where he could find them, to the value, which he would keep 'till he were satisfied. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Quoth she, some say the soul's secure

Against distress and forfeiture. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

3. The thing seized by law.

4. Calamity; misery; misfortune.

There can I sit alone, unseen of any,

And to the nightingale's complaining notes

Tune my distresses, and record my woes. Shakespeare.

There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring. Luke xxi. 25.

People in affliction or distress cannot be hated by generous minds. Clarissa.

TO DISTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prosecute by law to a seizure.
2. To harass; to make miserable; to crush with calamity.

Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle. Deutr. ii. 9.

I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan. 2 Sa. i. 26.

DISTRESSFUL. adj. [distress and full.] Miserable; full of trouble; full of misery.

He, with a body fill'd and vacant mind,

Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread. Sh. H. V.

I often did beguile her of her tears,

When I did speak of some distressful stroke

That my youth suffered. Shakespeare's Othello.

The ewes still folded, with distended thighs,

Unmilk'd, lay bleating in distressful cries. Pope's Odyssey.

Distressful and desolating events, which have attended the mistakes of politicians, should be present in their minds. Watts.

TO DISTRIBUTE. v. a. [distribuo, Lat.] To divide amongst more than two; to deal out.

The king sent over a great store of gentlemen and warlike people, amongst whom he distributed the land. Spenser.

The spoil got on the Antiates

Was not distributed. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

She did distribute her goods to all them that were nearest of kindred. Judith xvi. 24.

DISTRIBUTER. n. f. [from distribute.] One who deals out any thing; a bestower.

There were judges and distributers of justice appointed for the several parts of his dominions. Addison on Italy.

Of that peculiar matter out of which the bodies of vegetables, and consequently of animals, are formed, water is the common vehicle and distributor to the parts of those bodies. Woodward's Natural History.

DISTRIBUTION. n. f. [distributio, Latin.]

1. The act of distributing or dealing out to others.

Of great riches there is no real use, except it be in the distribution. Bacon's Essays.

Providence has made an equal distribution of natural gifts, whereof each creature severally has a share. L'Estrange.

Every man in a great station would imitate the queen in the distribution of offices in his disposal. Swift.

2. Act

2. Act of giving in charity.

Let us govern our charitable distributions by this pattern of nature, and maintain a mutual circulation of benefits and returns.

Atterbury's Sermons.

3. [In logic.] As an integral whole is distinguished into its several parts by division; so the word distribution is most properly used, when we distinguish an universal whole into its several kinds of species.

Watts's Logick.

DISTRIBUTIVE. adj. [from distribute.]

1. That which is employed in assigning to others their portions; as, distributive justice, that which allots to each his sentence or claim.

If justice will take all, and nothing give,

Justice methinks is not distributive. Dryden's Cong. of Gran.

Observe the distributive justice of the authors, which is constantly applied to the punishment of virtue, and the reward of vice, directly opposite to the rules of their best critics. Sw.

2. That which assigns the various species of a general term.

DISTRIBUTIVELY. adv. [from distributive.]

1. By distribution.

2. Singly; particularly.

Although we cannot be free from all sin collectively, in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in us; yet, distributively at the least, all great and grievous actual offences, as they offer themselves one by one, both may, and ought to be, by all means avoided. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

3. In a manner that expresses singly all the particulars included in a general term; not collectively.

An universal term is sometimes taken collectively for all its particular ideas united together, and sometimes distributively, meaning each of them single and alone. Watts's Logick.

DISTRICT. n. f. [districtus, Latin.]

1. The circuit or territory within which a man may be thus compelled to appearance.

Cowel.

2. Circuit of authority; province.

His governors of towns and provinces, who formed themselves upon the example of their grand monarch, practised all the arts of despotick government in their respective districts.

Addison.

With stern distaste avow'd,

To their own districts drive the suitor crowd. Pope's Odyss.

3. Region; country; territory.

Those districts which between the tropicks lie,

The scorching beams, directly darted, fry. Blackmore.

TO DISTRUST. v. a. [dis and trust.] To regard with diffidence; to diffide in; not to trust.

He sheweth himself unto such as do not distrust him. Wisd.

DISTRUST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Discredit; loss of credit; loss of confidence.

To me reproach

Rather belongs, distrust, and all dispraise. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. Suspicion; want of faith; want of confidence in another.

You doubt not me; nor have I spent my blood,

To have my faith no better understood:

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust;

Nothing but love could make you so unjust. Dryd. Aureng.

DISTRUSTFUL. adj. [distrust and full.]

1. Apt to distrust; suspicious.

Generals often harbour distrustful thoughts in their breasts.

Boyle's Seraphick Love.

2. Not confident; diffident.

The great corrupters of discourse have not been so distrustful of themselves.

Government of the Tongue.

3. Diffident of himself; modest; timorous.

Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks;

It still looks home, and short excursions makes;

But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks.

Pope.

DISTRUSTFULLY. adv. [from distrustful.] In a distrustful manner.

DISTRUSTFULNESS. n. f. [from distrustful.] The state of being distrustful; want of confidence.

TO DISTURB. v. a. [disturbo, low Latin.]

1. To perplex; to disquiet; to deprive of tranquillity.

He that has his own troubles, and the happiness of his neighbours to disturb him, has work enough. Collier on Envy.

His youth with wants and hardships must engage;

Plots and rebellions must disturb his age.

Prior.

2. To confound; to put into irregular motions.

3. To interrupt; to hinder.

4. To turn off from any direction: with from. This is not usual.

It oft-times may succeed, so as perhaps

Shall grieve him, if I fail not; and disturb

His inmost counsels from their destin'd aim. Milt. Par. Lost.

DISTURBANCE. n. f. [from disturb.]

1. Perplexity; interruption of tranquillity.

The denomination of money concerns trade, and the alteration of that necessarily brings disturbance to it.

Locke.

2. Confusion; disorder.

They can survey a variety of complicated ideas without fatigue or disturbance.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. Tumult; violation of peace.

This mischief had not then befall'n,

And more that shall befall: innumerable

Disturbances on earth through female snares. Milt. Pa. Lost.

DISTURBER. n. f. [from disturb.]

1. A violator of peace; he that causes tumults and publick disorders.

He stands in the fight both of God and men most justly blameable, as a needless disturber of the peace of God's church, and an author of dissension. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

Men that make an insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the publick tranquillity. Addis. Freeholder.

Ye great disturbers, who in endless noise,

In blood and horror, seek unnatural joys;

For what is all this bustle, but to shun

Those thoughts with which you dare not be alone. Granv.

2. He that injures tranquillity; he that causes perturbation of mind.

Two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,

Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shakesp. R. III.

TO DISTURN. v. a. [dis and turn.] To turn off; to turn aside.

He glad was to disturn that furious stream

Of war on us, that else had swallow'd them.

Daniel.

DISVALUATION. n. f. [dis and valuation.] Disgrace; diminution of reputation.

What can be more to the disvaluation of the power of the Spaniard, than that eleven thousand English should, within two months, have marched into the heart of his countries?

Bacon's War with Spain.

TO DISVALUE. v. a. [dis and value.] To undervalue; to set a low price upon.

Her reputation was disvalu'd

In levity.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

The very same pride which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does as forcibly incline him to contemn and disvalue what he has.

Government of the Tongue.

TO DISVELOP. v. a. [develop, French.] To uncover. Dict.

DISUNION. n. f. [dis and union.]

1. Separation; disjunction.

Rest is most opposite to motion, the immediate cause of disunion.

Glanv. Scept. c. 7.

Disunion of the corporeal principles, and the vital, causeth death.

Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Let not peace be made before the disunion of France and Spain.

Addison's State of the War.

The strength of it will join itself to France, and grow the closer to it by its disunion from the rest.

Addison on the War.

2. Breach of concord.

TO DISUNITE. v. a. [dis and unite.]

1. To separate; to divide.

The beast they then divide, and disunite

The ribs and limbs.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. To part friends or allies.

TO DISUNITE. v. n. [dis and unite.] To fall asunder; to become separate.

While every particular member of the publick provides solely for itself, the several joints of the body politick do separate and disunite, and so become unable to support the whole.

South's Sermons.

DISUNITY. n. f. [dis and unity.] A state of actual separation.

Disunity is the natural property of matter, which of itself is nothing else but an infinite congeries of physical monads.

More's Divine Dialogues.

DISUSAGE. n. f. [dis and usage.] The gradual cessation of use or custom.

They cut off presently such things as might be extinguished without danger, leaving the rest to be abolished by disusage through tract of time.

Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

DISUSE. n. f. [dis and use.]

1. Cessation of use; desuetude; want of practice.

The disuse of the tongue is the only effectual remedy against these.

Addison's Guardian, N. 12.

2. Cessation of custom.

That obligation upon the lands did not prescribe, or come into disuse, but by fifty consecutive years.

Arbuthnot.

TO DISUSE. v. a. [dis and use.]

1. To cease to make use of.

'Tis law, though custom now diverts the course;

As nature's institute is yet in force,

Uncancell'd, though disus'd.

Dryden's Fables.

Priam, in arms disus'd, invests his limbs decay'd.

Dryden.

2. To disaccustom.

He shall his troops for fighting fields prepare,

Disus'd to toils and triumphs of the war.

Dryden's Æn.

TO DISVOUCH. v. a. [dis and vouch.] To destroy the credit of; to contradict.

Every letter he hath writ hath disvouched another.

Shakesp.

DISWITTED. adj. [dis and wit.] Deprived of the wits; mad; distracted. A word not in use.

She ran away alone;

Which when they heard, there was not one

But

But hasted after to be gone,
As she had been diswitted. Drayton's Nymphid.

DIT. n. f. [dicht, Dutch.] A ditty; a poem; a tune. Obsolete.
No bird but did her shrill notes sweetly sing;
No song but did contain a lovely dit. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

DITCH. n. f. [dic, Saxon; diik, Erse.]

1. A trench cut in the ground usually between fields.
Some asked for manors, others for acres that lay convenient for them; that he would pull down his fences, and level his ditches. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
Sudden the ditches swell, the meadows swim. Thomson.
2. Any long narrow receptacle of water: used sometimes of a small river in contempt.
In the great plagues there were seen, in divers ditches and low grounds about London, many toads that had tails three inches long. Bacon.
3. The moat with which a town is surrounded.
The ditches, such as they were, were altogether dry, and easy to be passed over. Knolles's History of the Turks.
4. Ditch is used, in composition, of any thing worthless, or thrown away into ditches.
Poor Tom, when the foul fiend rages, eats crowdung for fallets, swallows the old rat, and the ditch-dog. Shakespeare.

TO DITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To make a ditch.
I have employed my time, besides ditching, in finishing my travels. Swift.

DITCH-DELIVERED. adj. [ditch and deliver.] Brought forth in a ditch.
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DITCHER. n. f. [from ditch] One who digs ditches.
You merit new employments daily,
Our Thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, baily. Swift.

DITHYRAMBICK. n. f. [dithyrambus, Latin.]

1. A song in honour of Bacchus; in which anciently, and now among the Italians, the distraction of ebriety is imitated.
2. Any poem written with wildness and enthusiasm.
Pindar does new words and figures roll
Down his impetuous dithyrambick tide. Cowley.

DITTANDER. n. f. The same with pepperwort, which see.

DITTANY. n. f. [dictamnus, Latin.]
Dittany hath been renowned for many ages, upon the account of its sovereign qualities in medicines. It is generally brought over dry from the Levant. Millar.
Virgil reports of dittany, that the wild goats eat it when they are shot with darts. More's Antidote against Atheism.

DITTIED. adj. [from ditty.] Sung; adapted to music.
He, with his soft pipe, and smooth dittied song,
Well knows to still the wild winds when they roar. Milton.

DITTY. n. f. [dicht, Dutch] A poem to be sung; a song.
Although we lay altogether aside the consideration of ditty or matter, the very harmony of sounds being framed in due fort, and carried from the ear to the spiritual faculties of our souls, is, by a native puissance and efficacy, greatly available to bring to a perfect temper whatsoever is there troubled. Hok.
Being young, I fram'd to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
Strike the melodious harp, shrill timbrels ring,
And to the warbling lute soft ditties sing. Sandys.
His annual wound in Lebanon, allur'd
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate,
In am'rous ditties, all a Summer's day. Milt. Paradise Lost.
Mean while the rural ditties were not mute,
Temper'd to th' oaten flute;
Rough satyrs danc'd. Milton.
They will be singing and singing under thy inexorable windows lamentable dittie, and call thee cruel. Dryden.

DIVAN. n. f. [An Arabick or Turkish word.]

1. The council of the Oriental princes.
2. Any council assembled: used commonly in a sense of dislike.
Forth rush'd in haste the great consulting peers,
Rais'd from the dark divan, and with like joy
Congratulant approach'd him. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Swift to the queen the herald Medon ran,
Who heard the consult of the dire divan. Pope's Odyssey.

TO DIVARICATE. v. n. [divaricatus, Latin.] To be parted into two; to become bifid.
The partitions are strained across; and as they tend towards the crust, they gradually lessen: one of them also divaricates into two, and another into several small ones. Woodward.

TO DIVARICATE. v. a. To divide into two.
A slender pipe is produced forward towards the throat, whereinto it is at last inserted, and is there divaricated, after the same manner as the spermatick vessels. Grew's Cosm. Sac.

DIVARICATION. n. f. [divaricatio, Latin.]

1. Partition into two.
Dogs, running before their masters, will stop at a divarica- tion of the way, 'till they see which hand their masters will take. Ray on the Creation.
2. Division of opinions.

To take away all doubt, or any probable divarication, the curse is plainly specified. Eron's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 11.

TO DIVE. v. n. [suppan, Saxon.]

1. To sink voluntarily under water.
I am not yet informed, whether when a diver diveth, having his eyes open, and swimeth upon his back, he sees things in the air greater or less. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 76.
Around our pole the spiry dragon glides,
And, like a winding stream, the Bears divides,
The less and greater; who, by fate's decree,
Abhor to dive beneath the Southern sea. Dryd. Virg. Georg.
That the air in the blood-vessels of live bodies has a communication with the outward air, I think, seems plain, from the experiments of human creatures being able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Aib.
2. To go under water in search of any thing Crocodiles defend those pearls which lie in the lakes: the poor Indians are eaten up by them, when they dive for the pearl. Kaleigh's History of the World.
The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain. Pope's Essays.
3. To go deep into any question; doctrine; or science.
The wits that div'd most deep, and soar'd most high,
Seeking man's powers, have found his weakness such. Davies.
He performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.
Whensoever we would proceed beyond those simple ideas, and dive farther into the nature of things, we fall presently into darkness and obscurity. Locke.
You swim a-top, and on the surface strive;
But to the depths of nature never dive. Blackmore.
You should have div'd into my inmost thoughts. Phillips.
4. To immerge into any business or condition.
Sweet prince, th'untainted virtue of your years
Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit,
Nor can you distinguish. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
5. To depart from observation.
Dive thoughts down to my soul, here Clarence comes.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

TO DIVE. v. a. To explore by diving.
Then Brutus, Rome's first martyr I must name,
The Curtii bravely div'd the gulph of fame. Denham.

DIVER. n. f. [from dive.]

1. One that sinks voluntarily under water.
If perseverance gain the diver's prize,
Not everlasting Blackmore this denies. Pope's Dunciad.
2. One that goes under water in search of treasure.
It is evident, from the relation of divers and fishers for pearls, that there are many kinds of shell-fish which lie perpetually concealed in the deep, screened from our sight. Woodw.
3. He that enters deep into knowledge or study.
He would have him, as I conceive it, to be no superficial and floating artificer; but a diver into causes, and into the mysteries of proportion. Wotton's Architecture.

TO DIVERGE. v. n. [diverge, Latin.] To tend various ways from one point.
Homogeneous rays, which flow from several points of any object, and fall perpendicularly on any reflecting surface, shall afterwards diverge from so many points. Newton's Opt.

DIVERGENT. adj. [from divergens, Lat.] Tending to various parts from one point.

DIVERS. adj. [diversus, Latin] Several; sundry; more than one. It is now grown out of use.
We have divers examples in the primitive church of such as, by fear, being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, after repented, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel. Whitgift.

The teeth breed when the child is a year and a half old:
then they cast them, and new ones come about seven years;
but divers have backward teeth come at twenty, some at thirty and forty. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 755.
Divers letters were shot into the city with arrows, wherein Solymans councils were revealed. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
Divers friends thought it strange, that a white dry body should acquire a rich colour, upon the affusion of springwater. Boyle on Colours.

DIVERSE. adj. [diversus, Latin.]

1. Different from another.
Four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another. Dan. vii. 3.
2. Different from itself; various; multiform; diffused.
Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did she yet ever favour any man so much as to be wholly his. Ben. Johnson.
3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.
To seize his papers, Curl, was next thy care;
His papers light, fly diverse tost in air. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii.

DIVERSIFICATION. n. f. [from diversify.]

1. The act of changing forms or qualities.
If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will not wonder that such fruitful principles, or manners manners of diversification, should generate differing colours.

Boyle on Colours.

2. Variation; variegation.
3. Variety of forms; multiformity.
4. Change; alteration.

This which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO DIVE'RSIFY. v. a. [diversifier, French.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another.

Locke.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations.

Addison's Spectator, No. 211.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters.

Addison's Spectator.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods and plains, one place more clear, another more darksome, it is a pleasant picture.

Sidney.

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter, which may be much diversified.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

DIVE'RSION. n. f. [from divert.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course.

Cutting off the tops, and pulling off the buds, work retention of the sap for a time, and diversion of it to the sprouts that were not forward.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. The cause by which any thing is turned from its proper course or tendency.

Fortunes, honour, friends,

Are mere diversions from love's proper object,

Which only is itself.

Denham's Sophy.

3. Sport; something that unbends the mind by turning it off from care. Diversion seems to be something lighter than amusement, and less forcible than pleasure.

You for those ends whole days in council sit,

And the diversions of your youth forget.

Waller.

In the book of games and diversions the reader's mind may be supposed to be relaxed.

Addison's Spectator.

Such productions of wit and humour as expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions to readers.

Addison's Freeholder.

4. [In war.] The act or purpose of drawing the enemy off from some design, by threatening or attacking a distant part.

DIVE'RSITY. n. f. [diversité, Fr. from diversitas, Latin.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness.

Then is there in this diversity no contrariety.

Hooker, b. v.

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and not resting in a bare diversity, quickly rise into a contrariety.

South's Sermons.

2. Variety.

The diversity of ceremonies in this kind ought not to cause dissension in churches.

Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tension.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of stations; and if God should grant every one a middle station, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness proposed in it.

Rogers.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,

Blushing in bright diversities of day.

Pope, Epistle 4.

DIVER'SLY. adv. [from diverse.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously.

Our common necessities, and the lack we all have as well of ghostly, as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive: what all stand in need of seldom lieth hid.

Hooker, b. v. f. 43.

Both of them do diversly work, as they have their medium diversly disposed.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 264.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business, displeasing to his people, was diversly interpreted.

Bacon.

Leicester bewrayed a desire to plant him in the queen's favour, which was diversly interpreted by such as thought that great artizan of courts to do nothing by chance, nor much by affection.

Wotton.

The universal matter, which Moses comprehendeth under the names of heaven and earth, is by divers diversly understood.

Raleigh's History of the World.

William's arm

Could nought avail, however fam'd in war;

Nor armies leagu'd, that diversly assay'd

VOL. I.

To curb his power.

Phillips.

2. In different directions; to different points.

On life's vast ocean diversly we sail;

Reason the card, but passion is the gale. Pope's Ess. on Man.

Acting it many ways. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DIVISOR. n. f. [divisor, Latin.] The number given, by which the dividend is divided; the number which sheweth how many parts the dividend is to be divided into.

DIVORCE. n. f. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Latin.] The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre. Shak. Hen. VIII.
He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia. Dryden's Dedicat. to the Æn.

2. Separation; disunion.

Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections in her, from my religion. K. Charles.

These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms. Ayliffe's Par.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.

4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,

D I V

To DIVORCE v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.

Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is restrained, and not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them? Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.

The continent and the island were continued together, within mens remembrance, by a draw-bridge; but is now
divorced by the downfallen cliffs. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

So seem'd her youthful soul not eas'ly forc'd,

Or from so fair, so sweet a seat divorc'd. Waller.

3. To separate from another.

If thou wer't not glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulch'ring an adulteress. Shakespeare's King Lear.

If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full perfection, nevertheless the mind, that should possess them divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiseration. Hooker.

4. To take away.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

DIVORCEMENT. n. f. [from divorce.] Divorce; separation of marriage.

Write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand;
and send her out of his house. Deutr. xxiv. 1.

DIVORCER. n. f. [from divorce.] The person or cause which produces divorce or separation.

Death is the violent estranger of acquaintance, the eternal divorcer of marriage. Drummond's Cypr. Grove.

DIURETICK. adj. [diureticus.] Having the power to provoke urine.

Diureticks are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, that relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as force and stimulate.
Those emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs. Arbuthnot.

DIURNAL. adj. [diurnus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the day.

We observe in a day, which is a short year, the greatest heat about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, which is the diurnal solstice, and the same is evident from the thermometer. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

Think, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter sere foment. Milt. Par. Lost.

them to the publick. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 56.

DIUTURNITY. n. f. [diuturnitas, Latin] Length of duration.

Such a coming, as it might be said, that that generation should not pass 'till it was fulfilled, they needed not suppose of such diuturnity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 10.

To DIVULGE. v. a. [divulgo, Latin.]

1. To publish; to make publick; to reveal to the world.

Men are better contented to have their commendations suppressed than the contrary much divulged. Hooker, Dedicat.

I will pluck the veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress
Page, and divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden's Æn.

You are deprived of the right over your own sentiments, of the privilege of every human creature, to divulge or conceal them. Pope.

The cabinets of the sick, and the closets of the dead, have been ransacked to publish our private letters, and divulge to all mankind the most secret sentiments of friendship. Pope.

2. To proclaim.

This is true glory and renown, when God
Looking on th' earth, with approbation, marks
The just man, and divulges him through heav'n
To all his angels, who with true applause Recount his praises. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

DIVULGER. n. f. [from divulge.] A publisher; one that exposes to publick view.

I think

I think not any thing in my letters could tend so much to my reproach, as the odious divulging of them did to the infamy of the divulgers. King Charles.

DIVULSION. n. f. [divulso, Latin.] The act of plucking awry.

Aristotle, in his Ethicks, takes up the conceit of the beaver, and the divulsion of his testicles. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

TO DIZEN. v. a. [This word seems corrupted from dight.]

To dress; to deck; to rig out. A low word.

Your ladyship lifts up the fash to be seen;

For sure I had dizen'd you out like a queen. Swift.

DIZZY. adj. [דִּזְרִי, דִּזְרִיג, Saxon.]

1. Giddy; vertiginous; having in the head the sensation of turning round.

All on a sudden miserable pain

Surpriz'd thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swam

In darkness. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 753.

2. Causing giddiness.

How fearful

And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!

The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Giddy; thoughtless.

What followers, what retinue can'st thou gain?

Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude,

Longer than thou can'st feed them on thy cost? Milton.

TO DIZZY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To whirl round; to make giddy.

Not the dreadful spout,

Which shipmen do the hurricano call,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear

In his descent, than shall my prompted sword

Falling on Diomede. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

TO DO. v. a. preter. did; part. pass. done. [don, Sax. doen, Dut.]

1. To practise or act any thing good or bad.

Thou hast done evil above all that were before thee. 1 Kings.

To do you salutation from his master. Shakesp. Jul. Caesar.

4. To cause.

A fatal plague which many did to dye. Spenser.

Nought can quench mine inly flaming side,

Nor sea of liquor cold, nor lake of mire,

Nothing but death can do me to respire. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

5. To transact.

The thing was not done in a corner. Acts xxvi. 26.

6. To produce any effect to another.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waved indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame. Shakesp.

If there be any good thing to be done,

That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,

Speak to me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

'Tis true, I did so; nor was it in vain:

She did me right, and satisfy'd my vengeance. Rowe.

You do her too much honour: she hath neither sense nor taste, if she dares to refuse you. Swift.

7. To have recourse to; to practise as the last effort, commonly in the form of a passionate interrogation.

What will ye do in the end thereof?

Jer. v. 81.

8. To perform for the benefit of another.

I know what God will do for me. Sa. xxii. 3.

Acts of mercy done to the poor, shall then be accepted, and rewarded, as done to our Saviour himself. Atterb. Sermons.

9. To exert; to put forth.

Do thy diligence, to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

10. To manage by way of intercourse or dealing; to have business; to deal.

No man, who hath to do with the king, will think himself safe, unless you be his good angel, and guide him. Bacon.

I have been deterred by an indisposition from having much to do with steams of so dangerous a nature. Boyle.

What had I to do with kings and courts?

My humble lot had cast me far beneath them. Rowe.

11. To gain a point; to effect by influence.

It is much, that a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. Shakesp. Henry IV.

His queen, notwithstanding she had presented him with divers children, and with a crown also, though he would not acknowledge it, could do nothing with him. Bacon's H. VII.

12. To make any thing what it is not.

Off with the crown, and with the crown his head;

And whilst we breathe take him to do him dead. Sh. H. VI.

13. To finish; to end.

As for this mercy,

Which he intends for Lear and for Cordelia,

The battle done, and they within our power,

Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Go on to the reading of some part of the New Testament, not carelessly, or in haste, as if you had a mind to have done, but attentively, as to be able to give some account of what you have read. Duppa.

Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,

To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run. Dryden.

14. To conclude; to settle.

When all is done, there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Tillotson's Sermons.

15. To put.

Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death? Shak.

The lord Aubrey Vere,

Was done to death? Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

16. This phrase, what to do with, signifies how to bestow; what use to make of; what course to take; how to employ; which way to get rid of.

Men are many times brought to that extremity, that if it were not for God, they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour. Tillotson.

TO DO. v. n.

1. To act or behave in any manner well or ill.

Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob. 2 Kings.

As every prince should govern as he would desire to be governed, so every subject ought to obey as he would desire to be obeyed, according to the maxim of doing as we would be done by. Temple.

2. To make an end; to conclude.

You may ramble a whole day, and every moment discover something new; but when you have done, you will have but a confused notion of the place. Spectator, No. 47.

3. To cease to be concerned with; to cease to care about; to desist from notice or practice.

No men would make use of disunited parties to destroy one body, unless they were sure to master them when they had done with them. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

I have done with Chaucer, when I have answered some objections. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

We have not yet done with assenting to propositions at first hearing, and understanding their terms. Locke.

Having done with such amusements, we give up what we cannot disown. Pope.

4. To fare; to be with regard to sickness or health.

Good woman, how do'st thou?

—The better that it pleases your good worship to ask. Shak.

5. To succeed; to fulfil a purpose.

Come, 'tis no matter; we shall do without him. Addison.

You would do well to prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and, if that won't do, challenge the crown. Collier on Duelling.

6. To Do is used for any verb to save the repetition of the word; as, I shall come, but if I do not, go away; that is, if I come not.

Thus painters Cupid paint, thus poets do

A naked god, blind, young, with arrows two. Sidney.

If any thing in the world deserve our serious study and consideration, those principles of religion do. Tillotson's Sermons.

Take all things which relax the veins; for what does so, prevents too vigorous a motion through the arteries. Arbuthn.

7. Do is a word of vehement command, or earnest request; as, help me, do; make haste, do.

If thou hast lost thy land, do not also lose thy constancy; and if thou must die a little sooner, yet do not die impatiently. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

I am ensnared;

Heaven's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings: —Loose me.—I will free thee.

—Do, and I'll be thy slave. Dryden's King Arthur.

8. To Do is put before verbs sometimes expletively; as, I do love, or, I love; I did love, or, I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest. Bacon's Holy War.

This just reproach their virtue does excite;

They stand, they join, they thicken to the fight. Dryd. Æn.

Expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

9. Sometimes emphatically; as, I do hate him, but will not wrong him.

Perdition catch my soul

But I do love thee; and when I love thee not,

Chaos is come again. Shakespeare's Othello.

10. Sometimes

10. Sometimes by way of opposition; as, I did love him, but scorn him now.

To DOAT. v. n. See To DOTE.

DO'CIBLE. adj. [docilis, Latin.] Tractable; docile; easy to be taught.

The Asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docible age. Milton.

DO'CIBLENESS. n. f. [from docible.] Teachableness; docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general. Walton's Angler.

DO'CILE. adj. [docilis, Latin.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being docile and tractable, are very useful. Ellis's Voyage.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,

With smiles I could betray, with temper kill. Prior.

DO'CILITY. n. f. [docilité, French, from docilitas, Lat.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous. South's Sermons.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? The docility of an elephant, and the insinuity of a camel for travelling in deserts? Grew's Cosm. Sac.

DOCK. n. f. [docca, Saxon.]

The cup of the flower consists of six leaves, three large, and red; the other three lesser, and green: in the middle of the cup are placed six stamina. The three outer small leaves of the cup fall away, when ripe; but the three inner large leaves join together, and form a triangular covering, in the middle of which are contained three shining cornered seeds. The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb. Millar.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakespeare's Henry V.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows

Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose:

Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know

Love rooted out, again will never grow. Swift.

DOCK. n. f. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bon-tius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula. Grew's Museum.

DOCK. n. f. [As some imagine of δοκίον.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

There are docks for their galleys and men of war, most of them full; as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations. Addison on Italy.

To DOCK. v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

2. To cut any thing short.

One or two stood constant centry, who docked all favours handed down; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass. Swift's Examiner, No. 19.

3. To cut off a reckoning; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DOCKET. n. f. A direction tied upon goods; a summary of a larger writing. Dict.

DOCTOR. n. f. [doctor, Latin.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it, but a civil doctor,

Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Then stood there up one in the council, a pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws. Acts v. 34.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their pride,

Casuits, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes. Denham.

Each proselyte would vote his doctor best,

With absolute exclusion to the rest. Dryd Hind and Panth.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death

Will seize the doctor too. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

How does your patient, doctor?

—Not so sick, my lord,

As she is troubl'd with thick coming fancies. Shakesp. Macb.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother. Gov. of Tongue.

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,

That men may die without a double bribe:

Let them, but under their superiors, kill,

When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Collier.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be the doctor. Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school. Digby of Bodies.

To DOCTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To physick; to cure; to treat with medicines. A low word.

DOCTORAL. adj. [doctoralis, Latin.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

DOCTORALLY. adv. [from doctoral.] In manner of a doctor.

The physicians resorted to him to touch his pulse, and consider of his disease doctorally at their departure. Hakewill.

DOCTORSHIP. n. f. [from doctor.] The rank of a doctor.

From a scholar he became a fellow, and then the president of the college, after he had received all the graces and degrees; the proctorship and the doctorship, that could be obtained there. Clarendon.

DOCTRINAL. adj. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject. South's Sermons.

Not such as assent to every word in Scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ. South's Sermons.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching.

To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument. Hooker, b. v.

What special property or quality is that, which, being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

DOCTRINALLY. adv. [from doctrine.] In the form of doctrine; positively; as necessary to be held.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual forms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points. Ray on the Creation.

DOCTRINE. n. f. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or master; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not either at one time or other? Hooker, b. iii. f. 10.

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them. Atterbury's Sermons.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine.

Mark iv. 2.

DOCUMENT. n. f. [documentum, Latin.]

1. Precept; instruction; direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them; that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors. Bacon.

Learners should not be too much crowded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time. Watts.

2. Precept in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard. Govern. of Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes. Harr. on Consumptions.

DO'DDER. n. f. [touteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed, soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them in a very complicated manner. It has no leaves, but consists of such capillaments or stalks, as are brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have at certain distances tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment. The flowers stand in a kind of little round clusters on the stalks, are small, of a whitish or pale redish colour, of the bell-fashioned kind, and deeply divided into four or five segments at the edge. The flower is succeeded by a roundish fruit with three or four ridges, that give it a trigonal or tetragonal form: this has only one cavity. The seeds are numerous: these fall upon the ground, and produce young plants. Hill.

DO'DDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder, covered with supererescant plants.

Near the hearth a lawrel grew,

Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round

The household gods, and shade the holy ground. Dryd. En.

D O F

The peasants were enjoin'd

Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find. Dryd. Fables.
DODECAGON. n. f. [δωδεκά and γωνία] A figure of twelve sides.

DODECATEMORION. n. f. [δωδεκατημόριον.] The twelfth part.

'Tis dodecatemorion thus describ'd:

Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows streight, that every twelfth confines

Two whole, and one half portion of the signs. Creech.

To DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift and play fly tricks like a dog.]

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgie and dodge in the amends. Hall's Contemplation.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God. South.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,

Dodge'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull. Milton.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me: she dodged with me above thirty years. Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

DO'DKIN. n. f. [duytken, Dutch.] A doitkin or little doit; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

I would not buy them for a dodkin. Lily's Gram. construed.

DO'DMAN. n. f. The name of a fish.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

DOE. n. f. [da, Saxon; daa, Danish] A she-deer; the female of a buck.

Then but forbear your food a little while,

While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,

And give it food. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Bucks have horns, does none. Bacon's Natural History.

The fearful doe

And flying stag amidst the greyhounds go. Dryden's Virgil.

DOE. n. f. [from To do.] A feat; what one has to do; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into

The world, but he has done his doe. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

DO'ER. n. f. [from To do.] One that does any thing good or bad.

So foul a thing, O! thou Injustice art,

That tort'rest both the doer and distressed. Daniel's Civ. War.

It may be indeed a publick crime, or a national mischief; yet it is but a private act, and the doer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption. South's Sermons.

2. Actor; agent.

Sith thus far we have proceeded in opening the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten. Hooker.

3. Performer.

Then have they most commonly one, who judgeth the prize to the best doer, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs. Sidney.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person.

Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate;

Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd,

We go to use our hands, and not our tongues. Shak. R. III.

They are great speakers, but small doers; greater in shew than in deed. Knolles's History of the Turks.

5. One that habitually performs or practises.

Be doers of the word, and not hearers only. Comm. Prayer.

In this we shew ourselves weak, and unapt to be doers of his will, in that we take upon us to be controllers of his wisdom. Hooker, b. ii. f. 6.

DOES. The third person from do for doth.

Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries. Locke.

To DOFF. v. a. [from do off.]

1. To put off drefs.

You have deceiv'd our trust,

And made us doff our easy robes of peace,

To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.

Doff those links. Milton's Agonistes.

Nature, in awe to him,

Had doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.

That judge is hot, and doffs his gown; while this

O'er night was bowfy:

So many rubs appear, the time is gone

For hearing, and the tedious suit goes on. Dryd. Jnv. Sat.

D O G

Alcides doffs the lion's tawny hide. Rewe.

2. To strip.

Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear

Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?

Heaven's king, who doffs himself our flesh to wear,

Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love. Crasshaw.

3. To put away; to get rid of.

Your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight,

To doff their dire distresses. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device, Iago; and rather keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. Shakespeare's Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.—

—Can'st thou so doff me? Shakesf. Much Ado about Nothing.

5. This word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks.

DOG. n. f. [dogghe, Dutch.]

1. A domestick animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bulldog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion:

Reneg, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shak. K. Lear.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog. Locke.

The clamour roars of men and boys, and dogs,

Ere the soft fearful people, to the flood

Commit their woolly sides. Thomson's Spring, l. 375.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dog days.

Among the southern constellations two there are who bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides,

And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides. Creech.

3. A reproachful name for a man.

I never heard a passion so confus'd,

So strange, outrageous, and so variable,

As the dog Jew did utter in the streets. Shak. Mer. of Venice.

Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers. Phil. iii. 2.

4. To give or send to the Dogs; to throw away. To go to the Dogs; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.

Had whole Colepeper's wealth been hops and hogs,

Could he himself have sent it to the dogs? Pope's Epistles.

5. It is used as the term for the male of several species; as, the dog fox, the dog otter.

If ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes. Shakespeare.

6. Dog is a particle added to any thing to mark meanness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness; as dog rose.

To DOG. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt as a dog, insidiously and indefatigably.

I have dogg'd him like his murderer. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

His taken labours bid him me forgive;

I, his spiteful Juno, sent him forth

From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,

Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakespeare.

Sorrow dogging sin,

Afflictions sorted.

Herbert.

These spiritual joys are dogged by no such sad sequels as are the products of those titillations, that reach no higher than fancy and the senses. Glanv. Sceps. Pref.

I have been pursued, dogged, and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure. Pope.

Hate dogs their rise, and insult mocks their fall.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

DOG-TEETH. n. f. [dog and teeth.] The teeth in the human head next to the grinders; the eye-teeth.

The best instruments for dividing of herbs are incisor teeth; for cracking of hard substances, as bones and nuts, grinders, or mill-teeth; for dividing of flesh, sharp-pointed or dog-teeth. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DOG-TRICK. n. f. [dog and trick.] An ill turn; surly or brutal treatment.

Learn better manners, or I shall serve you a dog-trick: come, down upon all four immediately; I'll make you know your rider. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

DO'GBANE. n. f. [dog and bane.]

The leaves are produced opposite by pairs upon the branches: the flower consists of one leaf, cut into several segments: from its flower-cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail in the back-part of the flower. Miller.

DOGBERRY-TREE. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY.

DO'GBOLT. n. f. [dog and bolt.] Of this word I know not the meaning, unless it be, that when meal or flower is sifted or bolted to a certain degree, the coarser part is called dogbolt, or flower for dogs.

His

His only solace was, that now

His dogbolt fortune was so low,

That either it must quickly end,

Or turn about again, and mend. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

DO'GBRIAR. n. f. [dog and briar.] The briar that bears the hip; the cynosbaton.

DOG'CHEAP. adj. [dog and cheap.] Cheap as dogs meat; cheap as the offal bought for dogs.

Good store of harlots, say you, and dogcheap? Dryden.

DO'GDAYS. n. f. [dog and days.] The days in which the dog-star rises and sets with the sun, vulgarly reputed unwholesome.

Nor was it more in his power to be without promotion, and titles, and wealth, than for a healthy man to sit in the sun, in the brightest dogdays, and remain without warmth.

Clarendon.

DO'GDRAW. n. f. [dog and draw.] A manifest deprehension of an offender against venison in the forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound which he leads in his hand. Cowel.

DOGE. n. f. [doge, Italian] The title of the chief magistrate of Venice and Genoa.

Doria has a statue at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the title of deliverer of the commonwealth. Addisn.

It is part of the jaw of a shark, or dogfish. Woodward.

DO'GFLY. n. f. [dog and fly.] A voracious biting fly.

Thump-buckler Mars began,

And at Minerva with a lance of brass he headlong ran;

These vile words ushering his blows, Thou dogfly, what's the cause

Thou mak'st gods fight thus? Chapman's Iliad, b. xxi.

DO'GGED. adj. [from dog.] Sullen; sour; morose; ill-humoured; gloomy.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:

I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports. Shakesp. K. John.

Dogged York, that reaches at the moon,

Whose over-weening arm I have pluck'd back,

By false accuse doth level at my life. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Few miles on horseback had they jogged,

But fortune unto them turn'd dogged. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

DO'GGEDLY. adj. [from dogged] Sullenly; gloomily; sourly; morosely.

DO'GGEDNESS. n. f. [from dogged.] Gloom of mind; fullness; moroseness.

DO'GGER. n. f. [from dog, for its meanness. Skinner.] A small ship with one mast.

DO'GGEREL. adj. [from dog.] Loosed from the measures of regular poetry; vile; despicable; mean.

Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,

Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;

Who by my muse, to all succeeding times,

Shall live in spite of their own dogg'el rhymes. Dryden.

Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,

And in his sphere may judge all dogg'el rhyme. Dryden.

It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggerel, like that of Hudibras. Addisn's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 249.

DO'GGEREL. n. f. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.

The hand and head were never lost of those Who dealt in dogg'el, or who pin'd in prose. Dryd. Juv.

The vilest dogg'el Grub-street sends,

Will pass for your's with foes and friends. Swift.

DO'GGISH. adj. [from dog.] Curriish; brutal.

DOGHE'ARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

His unkindness,

That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights

To his doghearted daughters. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DO'GHOLE. n. f. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.

France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

But, could you be content to bid adieu

To the dear playhouse, and the players too,

Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,

With lands and gardens, at less price than here;

You hire a darksome doghole by the year. Dryden's Juv.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state,

Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate;

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all

On some patch'd doghole, ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

DO'KENNEL. n. f. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

A certain nobleman, beginning with a dogkennel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden.

I am desired to recommend a dogkennel to any that shall want a pack. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 62.

DO'GLOUSE. n. f. [dog and louse.] An insect that harbours on dogs.

DO'GMA. n. f. [Latin.] Established principle; settled notion.

Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect. Dryden.

Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some casuistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the Christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DO'GMATICAL. } adj. [from dogma.] Authoritative; magister-

DO'GMATICK. } rial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down the first principles of a sect.

The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness. Boyle.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way, which is so much his character. Dryden.

Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier on Pride.

Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination. Spectator.

One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him. Swift.

DO'GMATICALLY. adv. [from dogmatical.] Magisterially; positively.

I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically in a controversy, which I look never to see decided. South's Sermons.

DO'GMATICALNESS. n. f. [from dogmatical.] The quality of being dogmatical; magisterialness; mock authority.

DO'GMATIST. n. f. [dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive asserter; a bold advancer of principles.

I could describe the poverty of our intellectual acquisitions, and the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in. Glanville's Scept.

A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To DO'GMATIZE. v. n. [from dogma.] To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.

These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools,

Impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;

Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey,

And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way. Blackmore.

DO'GMATIZER. n. f. [from dogmatize.] An asserter; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on Papists or Protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hamm.

DO'GROSE. n. f. [dog and rose.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrescence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good instance. Derham's Physico-Theology.

DO'GSLEEP. n. f. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who raised an estate by snoring; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dogsleep. Addisn's Spectator.

DO'GSMEAT. n. f. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flower of all the market; these are but dogsmeat to 'em. Dryden.

DO'GSTAR. n. f. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

All shun the raging dogstar's sultry heat,

And from the half-unpeopled town retreat. Addisn.

DO'GSTOOTH. n. f. [from dog and tooth.] A plant.

It hath a fleshy root, shaped like a dog's tooth: the leaves are broad, and spread upon the ground: the flower is naked, and produced single upon each stalk, each consisting of six leaves, shaped like a lily, and hanging downward. The pointal of the flower becomes a roundish fruit, containing oblong seeds: they produce their flowers early in March, for which they are valued. Miller.

DO'GTROT. n. f. [dog and trot.] A gentle trot like that of a dog.

This said, they both advanc'd, and rode

A dogtrot through the bawling crowd. Hudibras, p. ii.

DO'GWEARY. adj. [dog and weary.] Tired as a dog; excessively weary.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,

That I'm dogweary. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

DO'GWOOD. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

DO'ILY. n. f. A species of woollen stuff, so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a doily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve's Way of the World.

DO'INGS. n. f. [from To do.] This word has hardly any singular.]

1. Things done; events; transactions.

I have but kill'd a fly.

—But! how if that fly had a father and mother?

How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buz lamented doings in the air? Shakesp. Tit. Andron.

2. Feats; actions: good or bad.

The next degree was to mark all Zelmane's doings, speeches and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding.

Sidney, b. ii.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know

My faculties nor person, yet will be

The chronicles of my doing; let me say

'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake

That virtue must go through. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

At length a reverend fire among them came,

And of their doings great dislike declar'd,

And testify'd against their ways. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Behaviour; conduct.

Never the earth on his round shoulders bare,

A maid train'd up from high or low degree,

That in her doings better could compare

Mirth with respect, few words with curtesy.

Sidney.

4. Conduct; dispensation.

After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms.

Swift.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High.

Hooker, b. i. f. 1.

5. Stir; bustle; tumult.

Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings? Hooker.

6. Festivity; merriment.

7. This word is now only used in a ludicrous sense, or in low mean language.

DOIT. n. f. [duyt, Dutch; doight, Erse.] A small piece of money.

When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian.

Shakesp. Tempest.

In Anna's wars a foldier, poor and old,

Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;

Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night

He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit.

Pope.

DOLE. n. f. [from deal; dælan, Saxon.]

1. The act of distribution or dealing.

The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner.

Bacon, Essay 35.

At her general dole

Each receives his ancient foul.

Cleveland.

2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.

Now, my masters, happy man be his dole say I; every man to his business.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Let us, that are unhurt and whole,

Fall on, and happy man be's dole. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

3. Provisions or money distributed in charity.

They had such firm dependance on the day,

That Need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray;

So sure the dole, so ready at their call,

They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall.

Dryden.

Clients of old were feasted; now a poor

Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,

Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd. Dryd. Juven.

4. Blows dealt out.

It was your presumise,

That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Sh. H. IV.

What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God

Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd,

He now be dealing dole among his foes,

And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way? Milt. Agonist.

5. [from dolor.] Grief; sorrow; misery.

Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Our sometime sister, now our queen,

Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,

With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,

Taken to wife.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

They might hope to change

Torment with ease, and soonest recompense

Dole with delight. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 892.

TO DOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To deal; to distribute. Dict.

DOLE. n. f. Void space left in tillage.

Dict.

DO'LEFUL. adj. [dole and full.]

1. Sorrowful; dismal; expressing grief.

She earnestly intreated to know the cause thereof, that either she might comfort, or accompany her doleful humour.

Sidney.

For none but you, or who of you it learns,

Can rightfully aread so doleful lay. Spens. Tears of the Muses.

With screwed face, and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances.

South's Sermons.

Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,

And in those absent flames began to fry:

The blind contagion rag'd within his veins. Dryd. Fables.

2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief.

How oft my doleful fire cry'd to me, tarry, son,

When first he spyed my love!

Sidney, b. i.

3. Dismal; impressing sorrow.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befall men in this present life.

Hooker, b. v.

From those flames

No light, but rather darkness visible,

Serv'd only to discover fights of woe,

Regions of sorrow! doleful shades! where peace

And rest can never dwell! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Happy the mortal man! who now at last

Has through this doleful vale of mis'ry past;

Who to his destin'd stage has carry'd on

The tedious load, and laid his burden down.

Prior.

DO'LEFULLY. adv. [from doleful.] In a doleful manner; sorrowfully; dismally; querulously.

He disburs'd, at St. Colmeskill isle,

Ten thousand dollars for our gen'ral use. Shakesp. Macbeth.

DOLORIFICK. adj. [dolorificus, Latin.] That which causes grief or pain.

The pain then by degrees returned, which I could attribute to nothing but the dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again.

Ray on the Creation.

This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid, is insensible, and not dolorifick.

Arbutnot on Air.

DO'LOUS. adj. [from dolor, Latin.]

1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy.

We are taught by his example, that the presence of dolorous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all seasonable joy.

Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

You take me in too dolorous a sense:

I spake t'you for your comfort. Shak. Anth. and Cleopatra.

Through many a dark and dreary vale

They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,

O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp,

Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 618.

Talk not of ruling in this dol'rous gloom,

Nor think vain words, he cry'd, can ease my doom. Pope.

2. Painful.

Their dispatch is quick, and less dolorous than the paw of the bear, or teeth of the lion.

More's Antidote against Atheism.

DO'LOUR. n. f. [dolor, Latin.]

1. Grief; sorrow.

I've words too few to take my leave of you,

When the tongue's office should be prodigal,

To breathe th' abundant dolour of the heart. Shakesp. R. II.

2. Lamentation; complaint.

3. Pain; pang.

A mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good, doth avert the dolours of death.

Bacon, Essay 2.

DO'LPHIN. n. f. [de'phin, Latin; though the dolphin is supposed to be not the same fish.] The name of a fish.

His delights

Were dolphin like; they shew'd his back above

The element they liv'd in. Shakesp. Anth. and Cleopatra.

You may draw boys riding upon goats, eagles, and dolphins:

Peacham on Drawing.

DOLT. n. f. [dol, Teutonic.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thickskul; a loggerhead.

Let dolts in haste some altar fair erect

To those high powers, which idly sit above. Sidney, b. ii.

Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,

As I have to be hurt: oh, gull! oh, dolt!

As ignorant as dirt!

Shakespeare's Othello.

Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,

Who, ere the blow, become mere dolts;

And

DOM

They neither have the hearts to stay,
Nor wit enough to run away. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

Wood's adulterate copper,

Which, as he scatter'd, we, like dolts,

Mistook at first for thunder-bolts.

Swift.

DO'LTISH. adj. [from do't.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.

Dametas, the most arrant doltish clown, that ever was without the privilege of a bauble.

Sidney.

Had ample territory, wealth and pow'r. Milt. Parad. Reg.

Ocean trembles for his green domain.

Thomson.

2. Possession; estate.

A Latian field, with fruitful plains,

And a large portion of the king's domains. Dryden's Æn.

DOME. n. f. [dome, French, from domus, Latin.]

1. A building; a house; a fabrick.

Best be he call'd among good men,

Who to his God this column rais'd:

Though lightning strike the dome again,

The man who built it shall be prais'd.

Prior.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest,

Affianc'd in my faith, a friendly guest:

Approach the dome, the social banquet share,

And then the purpose of thy soul declare. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A hemispherical arch; a cupola.

DOMESTICAL. } adj. [aomesticus, Latin.]

DOMESTICK. }

1. Belonging to the house; not relating to things publick.

The necessities of man had at the first no other helps and supplies than domestical; such as that which the prophet imply-

Hooker.

The practical knowledge of the domestick duties is the principal glory of a woman.

Clarissa.

2. Private; done at home; not open.

In this their domestical celebration of the Passover, they divided supper into two courses.

Hooker, b. iii.

Beholding thus, O, happy as a queen!

We cry; but shift the gaudy, flattering scene,

View her at home in her domestick light,

For thither she must come, at least at night. Granville.

3. Inhabiting the house; not wild.

The faithful prudent husband is an honest, tractable, and domestick animal.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 128.

4. Not foreign; intestine.

Domestical evils, for that we think we can master them at all times, are often permitted to run on forward, 'till it be too late to recall them.

Hooker, Dedication.

Equality of two domestick pow'rs

Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakespeare's Anth. and Cleopatra.

Combine together 'gainst the enemy;

For these domestick and particular broils

Are not the question here. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, theirs must needs be who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestick dissensions.

King Charles.

Such they were, who might presume t' have done

Much for the king and honour of the state;

Having the chiefest actions undergone,

Both foreign and domestical of late. Daniel's Civil War.

TO DOME'STICATE. v. a. [from domestick.] To make domes-tick; to withdraw from the publick. Clarissa.

DOMESTICK. n. f. One kept in the same house.

A servant dwells remote from all knowledge of his lord's purposes: he lives as a kind of foreigner under the same roof; a domestick, and yet a stranger too. South's Sermons.

TO DO'MIFY. v. a. [domifico, Latin.] To tame. Dict.

DO'MINANT. adj. [dominant, French; dominans, Latin.] Predominant; presiding; ascendant.

TO DO'MINATE. v. a. [dominatus, Lat.] To predominate;
to prevail over the rest.

I thus conclude my theme,

The dominating humour makes the dream. Dryden.

DOMINA'TION. n. f. [dominatio, Latin.]

1. Power; dominion.

Thou and thine usurp

The domination, royalties, and rights

Of this oppressed boy. Shakespeare's King John.

2. Tyranny; insolent authority.

Maximinus traded with the Goths in the product of his own estate in Thracia, the place of his nativity, whither he retired, to withdraw from the unjust domination of Opilius Macrinus. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. One highly exalted in power: used of angelick beings.

He heav'n of heav'ns, and all the pow'rs therein,

By thee created; and by thee threw down

Th' aspiring dominations. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Hear all ye angels, progeny of light,

Thrones, dominations, principdoms, virtues, pow'rs. Milton.

DO'MINATIVE. adj. [from dominate.] Imperious; insolent. Dict.

VOL. I.

DON

DOMINATOR. n. f. [Latin.] The presiding or predominant power or influence.

Jupiter and Mars are dominators for this North-west part of the world, which maketh the people impatient of servitude; lovers of liberty, martial and courageous. Camden's Remains.

TO DOMINE'ER. v. n. [dominor, Latin.] To rule with insolence; to swell; to bluster; to act without control.

Go to the feast, revel and domineer,

Carowse full measure.

Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.

The voice of conscience now is low and weak, chastising the passions, as old Eli did his lustful domineering sons. South.

Both would their little ends secure;

He sighs for freedom, she for pow'r:

His wishes tend abroad to roam,

And her's to domineer at home

Prior.

DOMI'NICAL. adj. [dominicalis, Latin.] That which notes the Lord's day, or Sunday.

The cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations.

Holder on Time.

DOMI'NION. n. f. [dominium, Latin.]

1. Sovereign authority; unlimited power.

They on the earth

Dominion exercise, and in the air,

Chiefly on man.

Milton's Par. Lost.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,

Dominion absolute; that right we hold

By his donation: but man over man

He made not lord.

Milton.

Blest use of pow'r, O virtuous pride in kings!

And like his bounty, whence dominion springs.

Tickell.

2. Power; right of possession or use, without being accountable.

He could not have private dominion over that, which was under the private dominion of another.

Locke.

3. Territory; region; subject; district.

The donations of bishopricks were a flower of the crown, which the kings of England did ever retain in all their dominions, when the pope's usurped authority was at the highest.

Davies on Ireland.

4. Predominance; ascendant.

Objects placed foremost ought to be more finished than those cast behind, and to have dominion over things confused and transient.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

5. An order of angels.

By him were all things created, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions; or principalities or powers.

Col. i. 16.

DON. n. f. [dominus, Latin.] The Spanish title for a gentleman; as, don Quixote.

TO DON. v. a. [To do on.] To put on; to invest one with.

The purple morning left her crimson bed,

And don'd her robes of pure vermilion hue. Fairfax, b. iii.

Her helm the virgin don'd.

Fairfax, b. i. Stan. 48.

What! should I don this robe, and trouble you? Shakefp.

DO'NARY. n. f. [donarium, Latin.] A thing given to sacred uses.

DONA'TION. n. f. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl

Dominion absolute; that right we hold

By his donation.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xiii.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given, and that as to the use of it too; which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money.

South's Sermons.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all.

Raleigh's Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n;

Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd,

Other donation none thou can'st produce. Milt. Par. Reg.

DO'NATIVE. n. f. [donatif, French, from donatus, Latin.]

1. A gift; a largess; a present; a dole of money distributed.

The Roman emperor's custom was, at certain solemn times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donative they received, wearing garlands upon their heads.

Hooker.

They were entertained with publick shows and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty.

Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders.

Cowel.

Never did steeple carry double truer;

His is the donative, and mine the cure.

Cleveland.

DONE. part. pass. of the verb. To do.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby;

Whereof who so did eat, estoons did know

Both good and evil: O mournful memory!

That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 11. Stanz. 47.

DONE

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded; when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakespeare's Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;

Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.

—Done: but my bargain shall be this,

I'll throw my mask off when I kiss.

Cleveland.

'Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge.

L'Estrange, Fab. 133.

DO'NJON. n. f. [now corrupted to dungeon, from domnionum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong,

Which of the castle was the chief dongeon,

Wherein the knightes were in prision,

Was evin joynant to the garden-wall,

Ther as this Emely had her playeing.

Chaucer.

DO'NOR. n. f. [from dono, Latin.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,

And begging lords and teeming ladies wait

The promis'd dole.

Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. i.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated by an ill execution of them, and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote.

Atterbury's Sermons.

DO'ODLE. n. f. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little, Faineant.] A trifle; an idler.

TO DOOM. v. a. [deman, Saxon.]

1. To judge.

Him through malice fall'n,

Father of mercy and grace! thou did'st not doom

So strictly, but much more to pity incline. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death,

While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne.

Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,

Dooming that son to be the fire

Of such another son.

Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,

And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;

Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls,

Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden's Æn.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death?

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave? Shakespeare.

5. To destine; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,

Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land. Dryd. Æn.

I have no will but what your eyes ordain;

Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign. Granville.

DOOM. n. f. [dom, Saxon; doem, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;

And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,

Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakesp. H. VI.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd,

Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best. Milton.

And now, without redemption, all mankind

Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell

By doom severe. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 224.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or excusing him.

Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windfor-castle, elves within and out:

Strew good luck, Ouphes, on every sacred room,

That it may stand 'till the perpetual doom. Shakespeare.

3. Condemnation.

Revoke thy doom,

Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,

I'll tell thee thou do'st evil.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Determination declared.

If friend or foe, let him be gently used.

—Revoke that doom of mercy; for 'tis Clifford. Sh. H. VI.

5. The state to which one is destined.

By day the web and loom,

And homely household-talk, shall be her doom. Dryd. Iliad.

6. Ruin; destruction.

From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom,

And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.

Pope.

DOOMSDAY. n. f. [doom and day.] The day of final and universal judgment; the last, the great day.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,

As it were doomsday.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

They may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomsday.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 6.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,

'Till doomsday wander in the shades of night:

This only holiday of all the year,

We privileg'd in sunshine may appear.

Dryden.

2. The day of sentence or condemnation.

All-souls day is my body's doomsday.

Shakespeare's R. III.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK. n. f. [doomsday and book.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the estates of the kingdom were registered.

The Danes also brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras, which is mentioned in doomsday-book.

Camden.

DOOR. n. f. [don, dupe, Saxon; dooris, Erse.]

1. The gate of a house; that which opens to yield entrance. Door is used of houses and gates of cities, or publick buildings, except in the licence of poetry.

All the castle quaked from the ground,

And every door of free-will open flew. Fairy Queen, b. i.

In the side a door

Contriv'd; and of provisions laid in large,

For man and beast.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

To the same end men sev'ral paths may tread,

As many doors into one temple lead.

Denham.

For without rules there can be no art, any more than there can be a house without a door to conduct you in. Dryd. Dufres.

2. In familiar language, a house.

Lay one piece of flesh or fish in the open air, and another of the same kind and bigness within doors. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Let him doubt whether his cloaths be warm, and so go naked; whether his house be firm, and live without doors.

Decay of Piety.

Martin's office is now the second door in the street, where he will see Parnel.

Arbuth.

Lambs, though they are bred within doors, and never saw the actions of their own species, push at those who approach them with their foreheads.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 121.

The sultan entered again the peasant's house, and turned the owner out of doors.

Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 99.

3. Entrance; portal.

The tender blades of grass appear,

And buds, that yet the blast of Eurys fear,

Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year. Dryd.

4. Passage; avenue; means of approach.

The indispensable necessity of sincere obedience, shuts the door against all temptations to carnal security.

Hammond.

5. Out of Door, or DOORS. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly sent away.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee now,

With a harsh voice and supercilious brow,

To servile duties, thou would'st fear no more;

The gallows and the whip are out of door. Dryden's Pers.

His imaginary title of fatherhood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother.

Locke.

6. At the Door of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.

In any of which parts, if I have failed, the fault lies wholly at my door.

Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

7. Next Door to. Approaching to; near to; bordering upon.

A seditious word leads to a broil, and a riot unpunished is but next door to a tumult.

L'Estrange.

DO'ORCASE. n. f. [door and case.] The frame in which the door is inclosed.

The making of frames for doorcases, is the framing of two pieces of wood athwart two other pieces.

Mox. Mech. Exer.

DO'ORKEEPER. n. f. [door and keeper.] Porter; one that keeps the entrance of a house.

He that hath given the following assistances to thee, desires to be even a doorkeeper in God's house, and to be a servant to the meanest of God's servants.

Taylor's Preface.

DO'QUET. n. f. A paper containing a warrant.

Before the institution of this form and office, no writ of covenant for the levying any final concord in chief, no doquet for licence to alien, nor warrant for pardon of alienation made, could be purchased and gotten, without an oath called an affidavit.

Bacon's Office of Alienation.

DO'RMA'NT. adj. [dormant, French.]

1. Sleeping.

He a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one: I can insure his anger is dormant; or should he seem to rouse, 'tis well lashing him, and he will sleep like a top. Cong. Old Bachelor.

2. In a sleeping posture.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not a lion rampant, but rather couchant and dormant.

Brown's Vulg. Err.

With this radius he is said to strike and kill his prey, for which he lies, as it were, dormant, 'till it swims within his reach.

Grew's Musæum.

3. Private; not publick.

There were other dormant musters of soldiers throughout all parts of the realm, that were put in readiness, but not drawn together.

Bacon's War with Spain.

4. Concealed; not divulged.

It would be prudent to reserve these privileges dormant, never to be produced but upon great occasions.

Swift.

5. Leaning; not perpendicular.

Old

Struck with the splendor of her face,

Do th' office of a burning-glass.

Cleveland.

DO'RMITORY. n. f. [dormitorium, Latin.]

1. A place to sleep in: used commonly for a room with many beds.

Rooms that have thorough lights are left for entertainment, and those that have windows on one side for dormitories. Mort.

Naked mourns the dormitory wall,

And Jones and Boyle's united labours fall. Pope's Dunciad.

2. A burial place.

The places where dead bodies are buried, are in Latin called cœmeteria, and in English dormitories. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DO'RMOUSE. n. f. [dormio, to sleep, and mouse.] A small animal which passes a large part of the Winter in sleep.

Come, we all sleep, and are mere dormice flies,

A little less than dead: more dulness hangs

On us than on the moon.

Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

After they have lain a little while they grow as drowsy as dormice, unless they are roused.

Collier on Thought.

DORN. n. f. [from dorn, German, a thorn.] The name of a fish; perhaps the same as the thornback.

The coast is stored both with shellfish, as scallops and sheathfish, and flat, as turbets, dorns, and holybut. Carew.

DO'RNICK. n. f. [of Deornick in Flanders, where first made.]

A species of linen cloth used in Scotland for the table.

To DORR. v. a. [tor, stupid, Teutonic.] To deafen or stupify with noise. This word I find only in Skinner.

DORR. n. f. [so named probably from the noise which he makes.] A kind of flying insect, remarkable for flying with a loud noise.

The dorr, or hedge-chaffer's chief marks are these: his head is small, like that of the common beetle: this and his eyes black: his shoulder-piece, and the middle of his belly, also black; but just under the wing-shells spotted with white. His wing-shells, legs, and the end of his tail, which is long and flat-pointed, of a light chestnut: his breast, especially, covered with a downy hair.

Grew's Museum.

DO'RSEL. } n. f. [from dorsum, the back.] A pannier; a basket

DO'RSE. } or bag, one of which hangs on either side a beast of burthen, for the reception of things of small bulk.

DORSIFEROUS. } n. f. [dorsum and fero, or pario, Latin.]

DORSIPAROUS. } Having the property of bearing or bringing forth on the back. It is used of plants that have the seeds on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back.

DO'RTURE. n. f. [contracted from dormiture; dormitura, Lat. dortoir, French.] A dormitory; a place to sleep in.

He led us to a gallery like a dorture, where he shewed us along the one side, for the other was but wall and window, seventeen cells, very neat, having partitions of cedar-wood.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

DOSE. n. f. [dosis.]

1. So much of any medicine as is taken at one time. Quincy.

The too vigorous dose too fiercely wrought,

And added fury to the strength it brought. Dryden's Virgil.

In a vehement pain of the head he prescribed the juice of the thapsia in warm water, without mentioning the dose.

Arbutnot.

2. As much of any thing as falls to a man's lot.

No sooner does he peep into

The world, but he has done his dose;

Married his punctual dose of wives,

Is cuckolded, and breaks, or thrives.

Hudibras, p. ii.

3. It is often used of the utmost quantity of strong liquor that a man can swallow. He has his dose, that is, he can carry off no more.

To DOSE. v. a.

1. To proportion a medicine properly to the patient or disease.

Plants seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, if corrected, and exactly dosed, may prove powerful medicines.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

2. To give physick to any man in a ludicrous sense.

DO'SSIL. n. f. [corrupted from d'rsel, something laid upon the part.] A pledget; a nodule or lump of lint, to be laid on a sore.

Her complaints put me upon dressing with such medicaments as basilicon, with præcipitate, upon a dossil. Wise man.

DOST. [the second person of do.]

Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead

Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow? Addis. Cato.

DOT. n. f. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, German, the white of an egg, and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jot, a point.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots, or spots.

DO'TAGE. n. f. [from dote.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecillity of mind; deliriousness.

The soul in all hath one intelligence;

Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,

DOT

And too much driness in an old man's sense;

Cannot the prints of outward things retain:

Then doth the soul want work, and idle sit,

And this we childishness and dotage call.

Davies.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts

As joyful as our hearts:

Our senses tell us, if we please not them,

Our love is but a dotage, or a dream.

Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,

Thank that fond dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

DO'TAL. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possess,

My people thin, my wretched country waste?

An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,

Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own? Garth's Ovid.

DO'TARD. n. f. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood; called in some provinces a twichild.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advise,

Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,

And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise,

Else never should thy judgement be so frail. Fairy Queen.

The sickly dotard wants a wife,

To draw off his last dregs of life.

Prior.

DO'TATION. n. f. [dotatio, Latin.] The act of giving a dowry or portion.

Dist.

To DOTE. v. n. [doten, Dutch; radoter, French.]

1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death make me dote;

I see my son.

Shakesp. Com. of Err.

A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dote: a sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jer. l. 36.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell

Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell:

Go, be the temple and the gods your care;

Permit to men the thought of peace and war. Dryd. Æn.

When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies.

Addison's Spectator, No. 117.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that, 'till I was fain to get this place, sometimes to retire in freely: I was even choked with his tediousness.

Sidney.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting observance. Shak. M. Wives of Windsor.

To DOTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love

Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,

And blest'd, and grac'd.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,

Because thou seest me dote upon my love.

Shakespeare.

All the beauties of the court besides,

Are mad in love, and dote upon your person.

Denham.

Mark those who dote on arbitrary power,

And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,

Or needy bankrupts.

Dryden.

Would you so dote upon your first desire,

As not to entertain a nobler fire? Dryden's Indian Emperor.

We dote upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctance, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life.

Burnet.

O death, all eloquent! you only prove

What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love.

Pope.

DO'TER. n. f. [from dote.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,

It mourns that painting and usurping hair

Should ravish doters with a false aspect;

And therefore is she born to make black fair. Shakespeare.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed, by the uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty.

Boyle.

DO'TINGLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,

Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid! Dryd. Juv.

DO'TTARD. n. f. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in churchyards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dotards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

DO'TTEREL. n. f. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
DOUBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Latin; duple, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.
 All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect. Ecclus. xlii. 24.

2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated.
 Great honours are great burthens; but, on whom They are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads:
 His cares must still be double to his joys,
 In any dignity. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
 I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetick; for then I was double their age, which now I am not. Swift.
 This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient. Swift's Draper's Letters.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.
 It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers by neglecting, and not removing, prove single. Bacon's Natural History, No. 513.
 I met a reverend, fat, old gouty fryar,
 With a paunch swoln so high, his double chin Might rest upon't. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.
 Thus curst steel, and more accursed gold,
 Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
 And double death did wretched man invade,
 By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryden's Ovid.
 No star appears to lend his friendly light;
 Darkness and tempest make a double night. Dryden.

5. Two in number.
 And if one power did not both see and hear,
 Our sights and sounds would always double be. Davies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two.
 The magnifico is much belov'd,
 And hath in his effect a voice potential,
 As double as the duke's. Shakespeare's Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one openly, the other in secret.
 I th' presence
 He would say untruths, and be ever double
 Both in his words and meaning. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 Fifty thousand could keep rank, that were not of double heart. Chron. xii. 33.

- DOUBLE-PLEA. n. f. [duplex placitum, Latin.] Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowel.

- DOUBLE-QUARREL, is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentic seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official: and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowel.

- DOUBLE is much used in composition, generally for doubly, two ways; as double edged, having an edge on each side; or for twice the number or quantity, as double died, twice died.

- DOUBLE-BITING. adj. [double and bite.] Biting or cutting on either side.
 But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
 His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
 His double-biting ax, and beamy spear,
 Each asking a gigantick force to rear. Dryden's Fables.

- DOUBLE-BUTTONED. adj. [double and buttoned.] Having two rows of buttons.
 Others you'll see, when all the town's afloat,
 Wrapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,
 Or double-button'd frieze. Gay's Trivia.

- DOUBLE-DEALER. n. f. [double and dealer.] A deceitful, subtle, insidious fellow; one who acts two parts at the same time; one who says one thing and thinks another.
Double-dealers may pass muster for a while; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

- DOUBLE-DEALING. n. f. [double and dealing.] Artifice; dissimulation; low or wicked cunning.
 Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.
 —But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

- Our poets have joined together such qualities as are by nature most compatible; valour with anger, meekness with piety, and prudence with dissimulation: this last union was necessary for the goodness of Ulysses; for without that, his dissimulation might have degenerated into wickedness and double-dealing. Pope's View of Epic Poetry.

To DOUBLE-DIE. v. a. [double and die.] To die twice over.
 Yes, I'll to the royal bed,
 Where first the mysteries of our love were acted,
 And double-die it with imperial crimson. Dry. and Lee's Oed.

DOUBLE-FOUNTED. adj. [double and fount.] Having two sources.
 Here the double-founted stream
 Jordan, true limit eastward. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

DOUBLE-HANDED. adj. [double and hand.] Having two hands.
 All things being double-handed, and having the appearances both of truth and falsehood, where our affections have engaged us, we attend only to the former. Glanv. Scops. c. 15.

DOUBLE-HEADED. adj. [double and head.] Having the flowers growing one to another.
 The double rich scarlet nonsuch is a large double-headed flower, of the richest scarlet colour. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DOUBLE-LOCK. v. a. [double and lock.] To shoot the lock twice; to fasten with double security.
 He immediately double-locked his door, and sat down carefully to reading and comparing both his orders. Tatler, No. 60.

DOUBLE-MINDED. adj. [from double and mind.] Leceitful; insidious.
 A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. James i. 8.

DOUBLE-SHINING. adj. [double and shine.] shining with double lustre.
 He was
 Among the rest that there did take delight,
 To see the sports of double-shining day. Sidney.

DOUBLE-TONGUED. adj. [double and tongue.] Deceitful; giving contrary accounts of the same thing.
 The deacons must be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre. 1 Tim. iii. 8.

For much she fear'd the Tyrians, double-tongu'd,
 And knew the town to Juno's care belong'd. Dryd. Virgil.

To DO'UBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To enlarge any quantity by addition of the same quantity.
 Rumour doth double voice, and echo
 The numbers of the fear'd. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond;
Double six thousand, and then treble that. Shakespeare.
 Our foe's too proud the weaker to assail,
 Or doubles, his dishonour if he fail. Dryd. State of Innocence.

This power of repeating or doubling any idea we have of any distance, and adding it to the former, as often as we will, without being ever able to come to any stop or stint, let us enlarge it as much as we will, is that which gives us the idea of immensity. Locke.

This was only the value of the silver: there was besides a tenth part of that number of talents of gold, which, if gold was reckoned in a decuple proportion, will just double the sum. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To contain twice the quantity.
 Thus reinforc'd against the adverse fleet,
 Still doubling our's, brave Rupert leads the way. Dryden.

3. To repeat; to add.
 He saw proud Arcite and fierce Palemon
 In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
 Like lightning flam'd their faulchions to and fro. Dryden.

4. To add one to another in the same order or parallel.
 Thou shalt double the curtain in the tabernacle. Ex. xxvi. 9.

5. To fold.
 He bought her sermons, psalms, and graces,
 And doubled down the useful places. Prior.

6. To pass round a headland.
 Presently departing again, and sailing along the coast, he doubled the promontory of Carthage, yet famous for the ruins of that proud city. Knolles's History of the Turks.
 Now we have the cape of Good Hope in sight, the trade-wind is our own, if we can but double it. Dryden.

To DO'UBLE. v. n.
 1. To increase to twice the quantity.
 'Tis observed in particular nations, that within the space of three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men double. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. To enlarge the stake to twice the sum in play.
 Throw Ægypt's by, and offer in the stead,
 Offer—the crown on Berenice's head:
 I am resolv'd to double 'till I win. Dryden's Tyran. Love.

3. To turn back, or wind in running.
 Under the line the sun crosseth the line, and maketh two Summers and two Winters; but in the skirts of the torrid zone it doubteth and goeth back again, and so maketh one long Summer. Bacon's Natural History, No. 398.

So keen thy hunters, and thy scent so strong,
 Thy turns and doublings cannot save thee long. Swift.

4. To play tricks; to use sleights.
 Who knows which way she points?
Doubling and turning like an hunted hare!
 Find out the meaning of her mind who can. Dryd. Sp. Fry.

DO'UBLE.

DOUBLE. n. f.

And though not sword yet cudgel proof. Hudibras, p. i.

It is common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather.

They do but mimic ancient wits at best,

As apes our granfires, in their doublets drest. Pope's Criticism.

2. Two; a pair.

Those doublets on the sides of his tail seem to add strength to the muscles which move the tail-fins. Grew's Museum.

DOUBLO'N. n. f. [French.] A Spanish coin containing the value of two pistoles.

DOUBLY. adv. [from double.] In twice the quantity; to twice the degree.

Young Hollis, on a muse by Mars begot,

Born, Caesar like, to write and act great deeds,

Impatient to revenge his fatal shot,

His right hand doubly to his left succeeds. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

Haply at night he does with horror shun

A widow'd daughter, or a dying son:

His neighbour's offspring he to-morrow sees,

And doubly feels his want in their increase. Prior.

TO DOUBT. v. n. [doubter, French; dubito, Latin.]

1. To question; to be in uncertainty.

Even in matters divine, concerning some things, we may lawfully doubt and suspend our judgment, inclining neither to one side or other; as, namely, touching the time of the fall both of man and angels. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

Let no man, while he lives here in the world, doubt whether there is any hell or no, and thereupon live so, as if absolutely there were none.

I doubt not to make it appear to be a monstrous folly to deride these things. Tillotson's Sermons.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability, because in a single notion, no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubtings?

Atterbury.

2. To question any event, fearing the worst.

Doubting things go ill, often hurt more

Than to be sure they do. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

3. Sometimes with of in both the foregoing senses.

Solyman said he had hitherto made war against divers nations, and always had the victory, whereof he doubted not now also.

Have I not manag'd my contrivance well,

To try your love, and make you doubt of mine? Dryden.

4. To fear; to be apprehensive.

I doubt there's deep resentment in his mind,

For the late slight his honour suffer'd there. Otway's Orph.

If there were no fault in the title, I doubt there are too many in the body of the work.

This is enough for a project, without any name; I doubt more than will be reduced into practice. Swift.

5. To suspect; to have suspicion.

The king did all his courage bend

Against those four which now before him were,

Doubting not who behind him doth attend. Daniel's C. War.

6. To hesitate; to be in suspense.

At first the tender blades of grass appear,

And buds that yet the blast of Eurus fear,

Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year. Dry.

TO DOUBT. v. a.

1. To hold questionable; to think uncertain.

He from the terror of this arm so late

Doubted his empire. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 113.

To teach vain wits a science little known,

T'admire superior sense, and doubt their own. Pope.

2. To fear; to suspect.

He did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions which we have to making entrance of strangers, which at that time was frequent, doubting novelties and commixture of manners. Bacon.

3. To distrust.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,

That love the fundamental part of state,

More than you doubt the change of it, prefer

A noble life before a long. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

VOL. I.

DOUBT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Uncertainty of mind; suspense; undetermined state of opinion.

Could any difficulty have been proposed, the resolution would have been as early as the proposal; it could not have had time to settle into doubt.

Those who have examined it, are thereby got past doubt in all the doctrines they profess.

South's Sermons.

Locke.

2. Question; point unsettled.

Hippocrates commends the flesh of the wild sow above the tame, and no doubt but the animal is more or less healthy according to the air it lives in.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

'Tis past a doubt,

All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out. Pope.

3. Scruple; perplexity; irresolution.

Our doubts are traytors,

And make us lose, by fearing to attempt,

The good we oft might win. Shak. Measure for Measure.

4. Uncertainty of condition.

And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have no assurance of thy life.

Deutr. xxviii. 66.

5. Suspicion; apprehension of ill.

I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you.

Gal. iv. 20.

6. Difficulty objected.

To every doubt your answer is the same,

It so fell out, and so by chance it came. Blackmore's Creation.

DOUBTER. n. f. [from doubt.] One who entertains scruples; one who hangs in uncertainty.

DOUBTFUL. adj. [doubt and full.]

1. Dubious; not settled in opinion.

Methinks I should know you, and know this man;

Yet I am doubtful. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Ambiguous; not clear in its meaning.

That about which there is doubt; that which is not yet determined or decided; obscure; questionable; uncertain.

In handling the right of a war, I am not willing to intermix matter doubtful with that which is out of doubt; for as in capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; so much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands.

Bacon.

In doubtful cases, reason still determines for the safer side; especially if the case be not only doubtful, but also highly concerning, and the venture be a soul, and an eternity.

South.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,

Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,

Mov'd, that the ramparts might be broken down,

To lodge the monster fabrick in the town. Dryden's Æn.

4. Not secure; not without suspicion.

Our manner is always to cast a doubtful and a more suspicious eye towards that, over which we know we have least power.

Hooker, Dedication.

5. Not confident; not without fear.

With doubtful feet and wavering resolution

I come, still dreading thy displeasure, Samson. Milt. Agonist.

DOUBTFULLY. adv. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiously; irresolutely.

Knowing how doubtfully all allegories may be construed, and this book of mine being a continual allegory, I have thought good to discover the general intention.

Spenser.

2. Ambiguously; with uncertainty of meaning.

Nor did the goddess doubtfully declare

Her alter'd mind, and alienated care. Dryden.

DOUBTFULNESS. n. f. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiousness; suspense; instability of opinion.

Though doubtfulness or uncertainty seems to be a medium between certain truth and certain falsehood in our minds, yet there is no such medium in things themselves.

Watts's Logick.

2. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaning.

In arguing, the opponent uses as comprehensive and equivocal terms as he can, to involve his adversary in the doubtfulness of his expressions: this is expected, and therefore the answerer, on his side, makes it his play to distinguish as much as he can.

Locke.

Most of his philosophy is, in broken sentences, delivered with much doubtfulness.

Baker's Reflections on Learning.

DOUBTINGLY. adv. [from doubt.] In a doubting manner; dubiously.

Whatever a man imagineth doubtingly, or with fear, must needs do hurt, if imagination have any power at all; for a man representeth that oftner than he feareth, than the contrary.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 945.

DOUBTLESS. adj. [from doubt.] Without fear; without apprehension of danger.

Pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure,

That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,

Will not offend them. Shakespeare's King John.

I am doubtless; I can purge

Myself of many I am charg'd withal. Shakesp. Henry IV.

DOUBTLESS. adv. Without doubt; without question; unquestionably.

D O W

Doubtless he would have made a noble knight. Sh. H. VI.
 All their desires, deserts, or expectations the Conqueror had no other means to satisfy, but by the estates of such as had appeared open enemies to him, and doubtless many innocent persons suffered in this kind. Hale's Com. Law of England.
Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no mens sins to answer for, but their own. South's Sermons.
 These mountains have been doubtless much higher than they are at present: the rains have washed away of the soil, that has left the veins of stones shooting out of them. Woodward.
Doubtless, oh guest! great laud and praise were mine,
 If, after social rites and gifts bestow'd,
 I stain'd my hospitable hearth with blood. Pope's Odyssey.
DOUCE'T. n. f. [doucet, French.] A custard. This word I find only in Skinner.
DO'UCKER. n. f. [from To duck, corrupted from To duck.] A bird that dips in the water.
 The colymbi, or douckers, or loons, are admirably conformed for diving, covered with thick plumage, and their feathers so slippery, that water cannot moisten them. Ray.
DOVE. n. f. [duvo, old Teutonic; taub, daub, German.]
 1. A wild pigeon.
 So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
 As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. Sh. Rom. and Juliet.
 Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
 Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove? Pope.
 Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly,
 When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky;
 Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
 When through the skies he drives the trembling doves. Pope.
 2. A pigeon.
 I have here a dish of doves, that I will bestow upon your worship. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
DO'VECOT. n. f. [dove and cot.] A small building in which pigeons are bred and kept.
 Like an eagle in a dovecot, I
 Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli; Alone I did it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
DO'VEHOUSE. n. f. [dove and house.] A house for pigeons.
 The hawk sets up for protector, and makes havock in the dovehouse. L'Estrange, Fab. 20.
 But still the dovehouse obstinately flood. Dryden.
DO'VETAIL. n. f. [dove and tail.] A form of joining two bodies together, where that which is inserted has the form of a wedge reversed, and therefore cannot fall out.
DOUGH. n. f. [dah, Saxon; deegh, Dutch]
 1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.
 When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
 Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
 For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians. Dryden.
 You that from pliant paste would fabricks raise,
 Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
 Your knuckles try, and let your finews know
 Their pow'r to kneed, and give the form to dough. King.
 2. My cake is DOUGH. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.
 My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;
 Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. Shakespeare.
DOUGHBAKED. adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.
 For when, through tasteless flat humility,
 In doughbak'd men some harmlessness we see,
 'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.
DO'UGHTY. adj. [boh-tiz, Saxon; deught, virtue, Dutch]
 1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent. Used of men and things.
 Such restless passion did all night torment
 The flatt'ning courage of that fairy knight,
 Devising how that doughty tournament,
 With greatest honour, he atchieven might. Fairy Queen.
 2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.
 If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left, he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.
 She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;
 But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. Pope.
DO'UGHY. adj. [from dough.] Unsound; soft; unhardened.
 Your son was milled with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakespeare.
TO DOUSE. v. a. [dous; but probably it is a cant word formed from the sound.] To put over head suddenly in the water.
TO DOUSE. v. n. To fall suddenly into the water.

 To swing i' th' air, or douse in water. Hudibras, p. ii.
DO'WAGER. n. f. [douairiere, French]
 1. A widow with a jointure.
 She lingers my desires,
 Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
 Long wintering on a young man's revenue. Shakespeare.
 Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addij. Freehold.

D O W

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.
 Catharine no more
 Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
 And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
DO'WDY. n. f. An awkward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman.
 Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench; Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, slidings and harlots. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
 The bedlam train of lovers use
 T' enhance the value, and the faults excuse;
 And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
 They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.
 No houswifry the dowdy creature knew;
 To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew. Gay's Past.
DO'WER. } n. f. [douaire, French.]
DO'WERY. }
 1. That which the wife bringeth to her husband in marriage.
 His wife brought in dow'r Cilicia's crown,
 And in herself a greater dow'r alone. Dryden.
 His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;
 For very want, he could not pay a dow'r. Pope's Epistles.
 2. That which the widow possesses.
 His patrimonial territories of Flanders were partly in dower to his mother-in-law, and partly not serviceable, in respect of the late rebellions. Bacon's Henry VII.
 3. The gifts of a husband for a wife.
 Ask me never so much dowery and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife. Gen. xxxiv. 12.
 4. Endowment; gift.
 What spreading virtue, what a sparkling fire;
 How great, how plentiful, how rich a dow'r,
 Do'st thou within this dying flesh inspire! Davies.
DO'WERED. adj. [from dower.] Portioned; supplied with a portion
 Will you with those infirmities she owes,
 Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
 Take her, or leave her. Shakespeare's King Lear.
DO'WERLESS. adj. [from dower.] Without a fortune; un-portioned.
 Thy dow'rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
 Is queen of us, and ours, and our fair France. Sh. K. Lear.
DO'WLAS. n. f. A coarse kind of linen.
Dowlas, filthy dowlas; I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made boulders of them. Shak. Hen. IV.
DOWN. n. f. [duun, Danish.]
 1. Soft feathers.
 Virtue is the roughest way;
 But proves at night a bed of down. Watton.
 Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
 No more shall you return to it alone;
 It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
 Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.
 Lie tumbling on our down, courting the blessing
 Of a short minute's slumber. Denham's Sophy.
 A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.
 2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.
 Thou bosom softness! down of all my cares!
 I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
 To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
 And yet be happy. Southern's Oroonoko.
 3. Soft wool, or tender hair.
 Scarce had the down to shade his cheeks begun;
 One was their care, and their delight was one. Dryden.
 I am not chang'd, I love my husband still;
 But live him as he was when youthful grace,
 And the first down began to shade his face. Dryd. Aurengz.
 On thy chin the springing beard began
 To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior.
 4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seeds.
 Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 822.
 Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
 By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.
DOWN. n. f. [dun, Saxon; dune, Erse, a hill; but it is used now as if derived from the adverb.] A large open plain, or valley.
 On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
 A hast'ned hare from greedy greyhound go. Sidney.
 Lord of much riches, which the use renowns;
 Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs. Sandys.
 Not all the fleecy wealth
 That doth enrich those downs is worth a thought,
 To this my errand, and the care it brought. Milton.
 How Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
 O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay.
 To compass this, his building is a town,
 His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope, Epistle iv.
 2. A hill; a rising ground. This sense is very rare.

And rests in those high beds his downy wings. Dryden.

Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest. Pope.

3. Soft; tender; soothing.

Banquo! Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The night's companion kindly cheating them
Of all their cares, tam'd the rebellious eye
Of sorrow with a soft and downy hand,
Sealing all breasts in a lethean band. Craslow.

Do'WRE. } n. f. [douaire, French. It ought to be written
Do'WRY. } dower.]

1. A portion given with a wife.

I could marry this wench for this dowry. Sidney.

And ask no other dowry but such another jest. Shakespeare.

The king must die, that I may make you great,

And give a crown in dowry with my love. Dryd. Span. Fry.

Tethys all her waves in dowry gives. Dryden's Virgil.

2. A reward paid for a wife.

Thine own hand

An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay,

And for a dowry a hundred forekins pay. Cowley's Davideis.

3. A gift; a fortune given.

DOXOLOGY. n. f. [δόξα and λόγος.] A form of giving glory to God.

David breaks forth into these triumphant praises and doxologies expressed in the text; Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who has kept me this day from shedding blood, and from avenging myself with my own hand. South's Sermons.

Little did Athanasius imagine, that ever it would have been received in the Christian church, to conclude their books with a doxology to God and the blessed virgin. Stillingfleet.

Do'XY. n. f. A whore; a loose wench.

When daffadils begin to pure,

With heigh! the doxy over the dale. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

To DOZE. v. n. [ᾰπᾰρ, Saxon; daes, Dutch.] To slumber; to live in a state of drowsiness; to be half asleep.

There was no sleeping under his roof: if he happened to doze a little, the jolly cobbler waked him. L'Estrange.

It has happened to young men of the greatest wit to waste their spirits with anxiety and pain, so far as to doze upon their work with too much eagerness of doing well. Dryd. Dufresn.

How to the banks, where bards departed doze,

They led him soft; how all the bards arose. Pope's Dunciad.

Chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,

And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Pope's Dunciad.

To DOZE. v. a. To stupify; to dull.

He was now much decayed in his parts, and with immoderate drinking dozed in his understanding. Clarendon, b. viii.

Two satyrs, on the ground,

Stretch'd at his ease, their sire, Silenus, found

DO'ZEN. n. f. [douzaine, French.] The number of twelve.

We cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, but it will be thought we keep a bawdyhouse straight. Shakespeare's Henry V.

That they bear such huge leaves, or delicate fruit, I could never find; yet I have travelled a dozen miles together under them. Raleigh's History of the World.

By putting twelve units together, we have the complex idea of a dozen. Locke.

The number of dissenters was something under a dozen with them. Swift concerning the Sacramental Test.

DO'ZINESS. n. f. [from dozy.] Sleepiness; drowsiness.

A man, by a violent fit of the gout in his limbs, finds a doziness in his head, or a want of appetite. Locke.

Do'ZY. adv. [from doze.] Sleepy; drowsy; sluggish.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays

His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

DRA. n. f. [ᾰrabbe, Saxon, lees.] A whore; a strumpet.

That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,

Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,

And fall a cursing, like a very drab! Shakesp. Hamlet.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. Shakespeare.

Babe,

Ditch-deliver'd by a drab. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Curs'd be the wretch so venal, and so vain,

Paltry and proud as drabs in Drury-lane. Pope.

DRACHM. n. f. [drachma, Latin.]

1. An old Roman coin.

See here these movers, that do prize their honours

At a crack'd drachm. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. The eighth part of an ounce.

DRACUNCULUS. n. f. [Latin.] A worm bred in the hot countries, which grows to many yards length between the skin and flesh.

DRA. adj. [for dread, or the preterit of To dread.] Terrible; formidable; dreaded.

Th' utmost sand-breach they shortly fetch,

Whilst the drad danger does behind remain. Fairy Queen.

DRAFF. n. f. [ᾰraf, dirty, Saxon; dras, Dutch, the sediment of ale.] Any thing thrown away; sweepings; refuse; lees; dregs.

You would think I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating draff and husks. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste

On such as have no taste;

To offer them a surfeit of pure bread

Whose appetite is dead!

No, give them grains their fill;

Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben. Johnson.

I call'd, and drew them thither,

My hell-hounds to lick up the draff and filth,

Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed

On what was pure. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 630.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,

'Till vermin, or the draff of servile food,

Consume me. Milton's Agonistes.

As Muley-Zeydan were not worth their care,

And younger brothers but the draff of nature. Dryden.

DRAFFY. adj. [from dras.] Worthless; dreggy.

DRAFT. adj. [corrupt for draught.]

Ulysses and old Nestor yoke you like draft oxen, and make you plough up the wair. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

To DRAG. v. a. [ᾰragan, Saxon.]

1. To pull along the ground by main force; to draw heavily along.

Such his aspect, when, foil'd with bloody dust,

Dragg'd by the cords which thro' his feet were thrust. Denb.

2. To draw any thing burthensome; any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.

'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife,

Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a ling'ring life. Dryden.

Can I, who lov'd so well,

To part with all my blifs to save my lover?

Oh! can I drag a wretched life without him? Smith.

While I have any ability to hold a commerce with you, I will never be silent; and this chancing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag it as long as I am able. Swift.

3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.

They shall surprize

The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains

Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.

To fall, that's justice;

But then, to drag him after! For to die,

And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryd. Cleomenes.

He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels, but he makes a shew of me. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.

The constable was no sooner espied but he was reproached with disdainful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.

In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;

The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down. Dryden.

To DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains

Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryden's Æn.

A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

DRA. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.

Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,

Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on hooks. Dryden.

The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgments to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net. Rogers's Sermons.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.

You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook, or otherwise. Walton.

3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.

The drag is made somewhat like a low car: it is used for the

the carriage of timber, and then is drawn by the handle by two or more men. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

DRA'NET. n. f. [drag and net.] A net which is drawn along the bottom of the water.

Dragnets were made to fish within the deep,

And castingnets did rivers bottoms sweep. May's Virgil.

Some fishermen, that had been out a whole day with a drag-net, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, that came home very heavy, which put them in hope of a sturgeon at last. L'Estrange, Fable 112.

One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a dragnet, great and small. Dryden.

Whatsoever old time, with his huge dragnet, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages, whether it be shells or shellfish, jewels or pebbles, sticks or straws, seaweeds or mud, these are the ancients, these are the fathers. Watts's Improvem.

To DRA'GGLE. v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.

You'll see a draggled damsel, here and there,

From Billingsgate her fishy traffick bear. Gay's Trivia.

He wore the same gown five years, without dragging or tearing. Swift.

To DRA'GGLE. v. n. To grow dirty by being drawn along the ground.

His dragging tail hung in the dirt,

Which on his rider he would flirt. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

DRAGON. n. f. [draco, Latin; dragon, French.]

1. A kind of winged serpent, perhaps imaginary, much celebrated in the romances of the middle age.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shak. Coriolan.

Swift, swift, you dragons of the night! that dawning
May bear the raven's eye. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

And you, ye dragons! of the scaly race,
Whom glittering gold and shining armours grace;

In other nations harmless are you found,
Their guardian genii and protectors own'd. Rowe.

On spiry volumes there a dragon rides;

Here, from our strict embrace, a stream he glides. Pope.

2. A fierce violent man or woman.

3. A constellation near the North pole.

DRA'GON. n. f. [dracunculus, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves are like those of arum, but divided into many parts: the stalk is spotted; but, in other respects, it agrees with the arum. Miller.

DRAGONET. n. f. [from dragon.] A little dragon.

Or in his womb might lurk some hidden nest

Of many dragonets, his fruitful feed. Fairy Queen, b. i.

DRA'GONFLY. n. f. [dragon and fly.] A fierce flinging fly.

The body of the cantharides is bright coloured; and it may be, that the delicate coloured dragonflies may have likewise some corrosive quality. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 729.

DRA'GONISH. adj. [from dragon.] Having the form of a dragon; dragonlike.

Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish;

A vapour sometime like a bear or lion. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

DRA'GONLIKE. adj. [dragon and like.] Furious; fiery.

He fights dragonlike, and does achieve as soon

As draw his sword. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

DRA'GONSBLOOD. n. f. [dragon and blood.] So called from a false opinion of the dragon's combat with the elephant.

Dragonsblood is a resin, so oddly named as to seem to have been imagined an animal production. It is moderately heavy, friable, and dusky red; but of a bright scarlet, when powdered: it has little smell, and is of a refinous and astringent taste. One sort is very compact: another sort less compact, and less pure, is called common dragonsblood. A third sort is tough and viscous, and of a blood colour; and in keeping it grows hard, like the first sort. Four vegetables afford dragonsblood: one is a tall tree in the Canaries: the sanguis draconis exudates from the cracks of the bark in the great heats. Another grows to six or eight feet high in the island of Java, where the resin is extracted from the fruit, about the size of a hazelnut, by boiling. A third is a tall tree in New Spain, and a true sanguis draconis flows from the trunk. The fourth grows in Java, and has a red bark: its trunk and large branches yield a refinous juice, which seems to be our finest sort of dragonsblood. Hill's Materia Medica.

Take dragonsblood, beat it in a mortar, and put it in a cloth with aqua vita, and strain them together. Peacham.

DRA'GONSHED. n. f. A plant.

It hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf; whose upper lip, which is crested, and its under lip, which is divided into three segments, end in chaps or jaws, and have the representation of a dragon's head. Miller.

DRA'GONTREE. n. f. See PALMTREE, of which it is a species.

This tree is common in the Madeira and Canary islands, where they grow to a considerable size; and from it is supposed that the dragonsblood is obtained. Miller.

DRAGOON. n. f. [from dragen, German, to carry.] A kind of soldier that serves indifferently either on foot or horseback.

Two regiments of dragoons suffered much in the late action. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 55.

To DRAGOON. v. a. [from the noun.] To persecute by abandoning a place to the rage of soldiers.

In politicks I hear you're flanch,

Directly bent against the French;

Deny to have your free-born foe

Dragoon'd into a wooden shoe. Prior.

To DRAIN. v. a. [trainer, French.]

1. To draw off gradually.

Salt water, drained through twenty vessels of earth, hath become fresh. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 2.

The fountains drain the water from the ground adjacent, and leave but sufficient moisture to breed moss. Bacon.

In times of dearth it drained much coin of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Eaton to Villiers.

Whilst a foreign war devoured our strength, and drained our treasures, luxury and expences increased at home. Atterb.

The last emperor drained the wealth of those countries into his own coffers, without increasing his troops against France. Swift.

2. To empty by drawing gradually away what it contains.

Sinking waters, the firm land to drain,

Fill'd the capacious deep, and form'd the main. Roscommon.

The royal babes a tawny wolf shall drain. Dryden.

While cruel Nero only drains

The mortal Spaniard's ebbing veins;

By study worn, and slack with age,

How dull, how thoughtless is his rage? Prior.

Had the world lasted from all eternity, these comets must have been drained of all their fluids. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

3. To make quite dry.

When wine is to be bottled, wash your bottles, but do not drain them. Swift's Directions to the Butler.

DRAIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The channel through which liquids are gradually drawn; a watercourse; a sink.

If your drains be deep, that you fear cattle falling into them, sling in stones and brickbats, and cover them with wood, flags, and turf. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Why should I tell of ponds and drains,

What carps we met with for our pains? Swift.

DRAKE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The male of the duck.

The duck should hide her eggs from the drake, who will suck them if he finds them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. [from draco, dragon, French.] A small piece of artillery.

Two or three shots, made at them by a couple of drakes, made them stagger. Clarendon, b. viii.

DRAM. n. f. [from drachm, drachma, Latin.]

1. In weight the eighth part of an ounce.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drams in the air, the balance in the water weigheth only four drams and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drams and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water as abovesaid. Bacon.

2. A small quantity, in a kind of proverbial sense.

One loving hour

For many years of sorrow can dispense;

A dram of sweet is worth a pound of sour. Fairy Queen.

No dram of judgment with thy force is join'd;

Thy body is of profit, and my mind. Dryden's Fables.

3. Such a quantity of distilled spirits as is usually drank at once.

I could do this, and that with no rash potion,

But with a ling'ring dram, that should not work

Maliciously like poison. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Every dram of brandy, every pot of ale that you drink, raiseth your character. Swift.

4. Spirits; distilled liquors.

A second fee, by meeker manners known,

And modest as the maid that sips alone;

From the strong fate of drams if thou get free,

Another Durfy, Ward! shall sing in thee. Pope's Dunciad.

To DRAM. v. n. [from the noun.] In low language, to drink drams; to drink distilled spirits.

DRAMA. n. f. [δραμα.] A poem accommodated to action; a poem in which the action is not related, but represented; and in which therefore such rules are to be observed as make the representation probable.

Many rules of imitating nature Aristotle drew from Homer, which he fitted to the drama; furnishing himself also with observations from the theatre, when it flourished under Eschylus, Euripides, and Sophocles. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

DRAMA'TICAL. } adj. [from drama.] Represented by action;

DRAMA'TICK. } not narrative.

I hope to make it appear, that in the great dramatick poem of nature, is a necessity of introducing a God. Bentley.

DRAMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dramatick.] Representatively; by representation.

Ignorance and errors are severally reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

DRA'MATIST. n. f. [from drama.] The author of dramattick compositions.

The whole theatre resounds with the praises of the great dramatist, and the wonderful art and order of the composition. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

DRANK. [the preterite of drink.]

To DRAPE. v. n. [drap, French; drapus, low Latin.]

1. To make cloth.

It was a rare thing to set prices by statute; and this act did not prescribe prices, but stinted them not to exceed a rate, that the clothier might drape accordingly as he might afford.

Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To jeer, or satyrize. [drapper, French.] It is used in this sense by the innovator Temple, whom nobody has imitated.

DRA'PER. n. f. [from drape.] One who sells cloth.

If a piece of cloth in a draper's shop be variously folded, it will appear of differing colours. Boyle on Colours.

The draper and mercer may measure her as they please.

Howel's England's Tears.

DRA'PERY. n. f. [drapperie, French.]

1. Clothwork; the trade of making cloth.

He made statutes for the maintenance of drapery, and the keeping of wools within the realm Bacon's Henry VII.

The reverend clergy should set us an example, by contenting themselves with wearing gowns, and other habiliments, of Irish drapery. Swift.

2. Cloth; stuffs of wool.

The bulls and frogs had served the lord Strut with drapery ware for many years. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

3. The dress of a picture, or statue.

Poets are allowed the same liberty in their descriptions and comparisons, as painters in their draperies and ornaments. Pri.

DRA'PET. n. f. [from drape.] Cloth; coverlet.

Thence she them brought into a stately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair dispreed,
And ready dight with drapets feastival,

Against the viands should be ministred. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

DRA'STICK. adj. [δραστικόν.] Powerful; vigorous; efficacious. It is used of a medicine that works with speed; as jalap, scammony, and the stronger purges. Quincy.

DRAVE. [the preterite of drive.]

He drove them beyond Amon's flood,

And their sad bounds mark'd deep in their own blood. Cowley.

The foe rush'd furious as he pants for breath,

And through his navel drove the pointed death. Pope's Iliad.

DRAUGH. n. f. [corruptly written for draff.] Refuse; swill. See DRAFF.

We do not act, that often jest and laugh:

'Tis old, but true, still swine eat all the draugh. Shakesp.

DRAUGHT. n. f. [from draw.]

1. The act of drinking.

Fill high the goblets with a sparkling flood,

And with deep draughts invoke our common god. Dryden.

They slung up one of their hogheads, and I drank it off at a draught, which I might well do; for it did not hold half a pint. Gulliver's Travels.

2. A quantity of liquor drank at once.

He had once continued about nine days without drink; and he might have continued longer, if, by distempering himself one night with hard study, he had not had some inclination to take a small draught. Boyle.

I have cured some very desperate coughs by a draught every morning of spring-water, with a handful of sage boiled in it. Temple.

Every draught, to him that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature; a provision for rheum and diseases. South's Sermons.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;

He reels, and, falling, fills the spacious cave. Dryden's Æn.

3. Liquor drank for pleasure.

Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer. Milton.

Number'd ills, that lie unseen

In the pernicious draught: the word obscene,

Or harsh, which, once elanc'd, must ever fly

Irrevocable; the too prompt reply. Prior.

Delicious wines th' attending herald brought;

The gold gave lustre to the purple draught. Pope's Odyssey.

4. The act of drawing or pulling carriages.

A general custom of using oxen for all sorts of draught, would be perhaps the greatest improvement. Temple.

The most occasion that farmers have, is for draught horses.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. The quality of being drawn.

The Hertfordshire wheel-plough is the best and strongest for most uses, and of the easiest draught. Mortimer's Husband.

6. Representation by picture.

Her pencil drew what'er her soul design'd,

And oft the happy draught surpass'd the image in her mind.

Dryden.

7. Delineation; sketch.

A good inclination is but the first rude draught of virtue; but the finishing strokes are from the will. South's Sermons.

I have, in a short draught, given a view of our original ideas, from whence all the rest are derived. Locke.

8. A picture drawn.

Whereas in other creatures we have but the trace of his footsteps, in man we have the draught of his hand: in him were united all the scattered perfections of the creature. South.

9. The act of sweeping with a net.

Upon the draught of a pond not one fish was left, but two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

10. The quantity of fishes taken by once drawing the net.

He laid down his pipe, and cast his net, which brought him a very great draught. L'Estrange, Fable 109.

11. The act of shooting with the bow.

Geffrey of Boullion, the glorious general, at one draught of his bow, shooting against David's tower in Jerusalem, broached three feeble birds called allerions. Camden's Rem.

12. Diversion in war; the act of disturbing the main design; perhaps sudden attack.

I conceive the manner of your handling of the service, by drawing sudden draughts upon the enemy, when he looketh not for you; and to watch advantages upon him, as he doth upon you. Spenjer's Ireland.

13. Forces drawn off from the main army; a detachment.

Such a draught of forces would lessen the number of those, that might otherwise be employed. Addison.

14. A sink; a drain.

Whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught. Mat. xv. 17.

15. The depth which a vessel draws, or sinks into the water.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length. Dryden.

With a small vessel one may keep within a mile of the shore, go amongst rocks, and pass over shoals, where a vessel of any draught would strike. Ellis's Voyage.

16. [In the plural, draughts.] A kind of play resembling chess. DRAUGHTHOUSE. n. f. [draught and house.] A house in which filth is deposited.

And they brake down the image of Baal, and brake down the house of Baal, and made it a draughthouse. 2 Kings x. 27.

To DRAW. v. a. pret. drew; past. pass. drawn. [*drag*an, Saxon.]

Draw the water for the siege. Nath. iii. 14.

5. To suck.

He hath drawn thee dry. Ecclus. xiii. 7.

There was no war, no dearth, no stop of trade or commerce; it was only the crown which had sucked too hard, and now being full, upon the head of a young king, was like to draw less. Bacon's Henry VII.

Sucking and drawing the breast dischargeth the milk as fast as it can be generated. Wiseman on Tumours.

6. To attract; to call towards itself.

We see that salt, laid to a cut finger, healeth it; so as it seemeth salt draweth blood, as well as blood draweth salt. Bacon.

Majesty in an eclipse, like the sun, draws eyes, that would not have looked towards it, if it had shined out. Suckling.

He affected a habit different from that of the times, such as men had only beheld in pictures, which drew the eyes of most, and the reverence of many towards him. Clarendon.

All eyes you draw, and with the eyes the heart;
Of your own pomp yourself the greatest part. Dryden.

7. To inhale.

Thus I call'd, and stray'd I know not whither,
From where I first drew air, and first beheld
This happy light. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 284.

While near the Lucrine lake, consum'd to death,
I draw the sultry air, and gasp for breath,
You taste the cooling breeze. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Why drew Marseille's good bishop purer breath,
When nature sick'n'd, and each gale was death? Pope.

 He proceeded so far in his insolence as to draw out his sword, with an intent to kill him. Dryden's Conq. of Granada.
 In all your wars good fortune blew before you,
 'Till in my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
 The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down. Dryden.
11. To let out any liquid.
 Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
 Of my more fierce endeavour. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 I opened the tumour by the point of a lancet, without draw- ing one drop of blood. Wise man's Surgery.
12. To take bread out of the oven.
 The joyner puts boards into ovens after the batch is drawn.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
13. To uncloset or slide back curtains.
 Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
 The sev'ral caskets to this noble prince. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
 Alarm'd, and with presaging heart he came,
 And drew the curtains, and expos'd the dame
 To loathsome light. Dryden's Sigism. and Guiscar.
 Shouts, cries, and groans first pierce my ears, and then
 A flash of lightning draws the guilty scene,
 And shows new arms, and wounds, and dying men. Dryden.
14. To close or spread curtains.
 Philoclea earnestly again intreated Pamela to open her grief, who, drawing the curtain, that the candle might not complain of her blushing, was ready to speak. Sidney, b. ii.
15. To extract.
 Spirits, by distillations, may be drawn out of vegetable juices, which shall flame and fume of themselves. Cheyne.
16. To procure as an agent cause.
 When he finds the hardship of slavery outweigh the value of life, 'tis in his power, by resisting his master, to draw on himself death. Locke.
17. To produce or bring as an efficient cause.
 Have they invented tones to win
 The women, and make them draw in
 The men, as Indians with a female Tame elephant inveigle the male? Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
 Religion will requite all the honour we can do it, by the blessings it will draw down upon us. Tillotson.
 Our voluntary actions are the precedent causes of good and evil, which they draw after them, and bring upon us. Locke.
 What would a man value acres of excellent land, ready cultivated, and well stocked too with cattle, where he had no hopes of commerce with other parts of the world to draw money to him, by the sale of the product of the island. Locke.
 Those elucidations have given rise or increase to his doubts, and drawn obscurity upon places of scripture. Locke.
 His sword ne'er fell but on the guilty head;
 Oppression, tyranny, and pow'r usurp'd,
 Draw all the vengeance of his arm upon 'em. Addis. Cato.
18. To convey secretly.
 The liars in wait draw themselves along. Judg. xx. 37.
 In process of time, and as their people increased, they drew themselves more westerly towards the Red sea.
Raleigh's History of the World.
19. To protract; to lengthen.
 Do you note
 How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?
 How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,
 And of an earthly cold? Observe her eyes! Shak. H. VIII.
 If we shall meet again with more delight,
 Then draw my life in length; let me sustain,
 In hopes of his embrace, the worst of pain. Dryden's Æn.
 In some similes men draw their comparisons into minute particulars of no importance. Felton on the Classics.
20. To utter lingeringly.
 The brand amid' the flaming fuel thrown,
 Or drew, or seem'd to draw, a dying groan. Dryd. Fables.
21. To represent by picture; or in fancy.
 I do arm myself
 To welcome the condition of the time;
 Which cannot look more hideously on me,
 Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
 With his other hand, thus o'er his brow,
 He falls to such perusal of my face,
 As he would draw it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Draw the whole world expecting who should reign,
 After this combat, o'er the conquer'd main. Waller.
 From the soft assaults of love
 Poets and painters never are secure:
 Can I, untouch'd, the fair one's passions move,
 Or thou draw beauty, and not feel its pow'r? Prior.
22. To form a representation.
 The emperor one day took up a pencil which fell from the hand of Titian, who was then drawing his picture; and upon the compliment which Titian made him on that occasion, he said, Titian deserves to be served by Cæsar. Dryden's Dufres.
23. To derive; to have from some original cause or donor.
 Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
 Submit to servile shame;

D R A

- Who from consent and custom draw
 The same right to be rul'd by law,
 Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.
 Several wits entered into commerce with the Egyptians, and from them drew the rudiments of sciences. Temple.
24. To deduce as from postulates.
 From the events and revolutions of these governments are drawn the usual instruction of princes and statesmen. Temple.
25. To imply; to produce as a consequential inference.
 What shews the force of the inference but a view of all the intermediate ideas that draw in the conclusion, or proposition inferred. Locke.
26. To allure; to entice.
 I'll raise such artificial sprights,
 As, by the strength of their illusion,
 Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 We have drawn them from the city. Jos. viii. 6.
 Draw me not away with the wicked. Pf. xxviii. 3.
 Having the art, by empty promises and threats, to draw others to his purpose. Hayward.
 The Spaniards, that were in the town, had so good memories of their losses in their former sallies, as the confidence of an army, which came for their deliverance, could not draw them forth again. Bacon's War with Spain.
27. To lead as a motive.
 Your way is shorter;
 My purposes do draw me much about. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.
 Æneas wond'ring stood, then ask'd the cause
 Which to the stream the crowding people draws. Dryden.
28. To persuade to follow.
 The poet
 Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
 Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
 But musick, for the time, doth change his nature. Shakespeare.
29. To induce; to persuade.
 The English lords, to strengthen their parties, did ally themselves with the Irish, and drew them in to dwell among them, and gave their children to be fostered by them. Davies.
 Their beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter their imitation than discourses. Locke.
30. To win; to gain: a metaphor from cards.
 This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me
 That which my father loses. Shakespeare's King Lear.
31. To receive; to take up.
 For thy three thousand ducats here is fix.
 —If every ducat in six thousand ducats
 Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
 I would not draw them, I would have my bond. Shakespeare.
32. To extort; to force.
 So sad an object, and so well express'd,
 Drew sighs and groans from the griev'd hero's breast. Dryd.
 Can you e'er forget
 The fond embraces, and repeated blessings,
 Which you drew from him in your last farewell? Add. Cato.
33. To wrest; to distort.
 I wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitgift.
34. To compose; to form in writing.
 In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.
 Clerk, draw a deed of gift. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
 The report is not unartfully drawn, in the spirit of a pleader, who can find the most plausible topics. Swift.
 Shall Ward draw contracts with a statesman's skill? Pope.
35. To withdraw from judicial notice.
 Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action: come, thou must not be in this humour with me. Shakespeare.
36. To eviscerate; to embowel.
 In private draw your poultry, clean your tripe,
 And from your eels their slimy substance wipe. King's Cook.
37. To DRAW in. To apply to any purpose by distortion or violence.
 A dispute, where every little straw is laid hold on, and every thing that can but be drawn in any way, to give colour to the argument, is advanced with ostentation. Locke.
38. To DRAW in. To contract; to pull back.
 Now, sporting muse, draw in the flowing reins;
 Leave the clear streams awhile for sunny plains. Gay.
39. To DRAW in. To inveigle; to intice.
 It was the prostitute faith of faithless miscreants that drew them in, and deceived them. South's Sermons.
40. To DRAW off. To extract by distillation.
 Authors, who have thus drawn off the spirits of their thoughts, should lie still for some time, 'till their minds have gathered fresh strength, and by reading, reflection, and conversation, laid in a new stock of elegancies, sentiments, and images of nature. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 40.
41. To drain out by a vent.
 Stop your vessel, and have a little vent-hole stopped with a spill, which never allow to be pulled out 'till you draw off a great quantity. Mortimer's Husbandry.
42. To DRAW off. To withdraw; to abstract.

- It draws mens minds off from the bitterness of party. Add.
43. To DRAW on. To occasion; to invite.
Under colour of war, which either his negligence draws on, or his practices procured, he levied a subsidy. Hayward.
44. To DRAW on. To cause; to bring by degrees.
The examination of the subtle matter would draw on the consideration of the nice controversies that perplex philosophers. Boyle on Fluids.
45. To DRAW over. To raise in a still.
I took rectified oil of vitriol, and by degrees mixed with it essential oil of wormwood, drawn over with water in a limbeck. Boyle on Colours.
46. To DRAW over. To persuade to revolt; to induce to change a party.
Some might be brought into his interests by money, others drawn over by fear. Addison on the State of the War.
One of differing sentiments would have drawn Luther over to his party. Atterbury.
47. To DRAW out. To protract; to lengthen.
He must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
Virgil has drawn out the rules of tillage and planting into two books, which Hesiod has dispatched in half a one. Addis.
48. To DRAW out. To extract; to pump out by insinuation.
Philoclea found her, and, to draw out more, said she, I have often wondered how such excellencies could be. Sidney.
49. To DRAW out. To call to action; to detach for service; to range.
Draw out a file, pick man by man,
Such who dare die, and dear will sell their death. Dryden.
Th' Arcadian king
And Trojan youth the same oblations bring:
Next of his men, and ships, he makes review,
Draws out the best and ablest of the crew. Dryden's Æn.
50. To range in battle.
Let him desire his superior officer, that the next time he is drawn out the challenger may be posted near him. Collier.
51. To DRAW up. To form in order of battle.
The lord Bernard, with the king's troops, seeing there was no enemy left on that side, drew up in a large field opposite to the bridge. Clarendon, b. viii.
So Muley-Zeydan found us
Drawn up in battle to receive the charge. Dryd. Don Sebast.
52. To DRAW up. To form in writing; to contrive.
To make a sketch, or a more perfect model of a picture, is, in the language of poets, to draw up the scenery of a play. Dry.
A paper might be drawn up, and signed by two or three hundred principal gentlemen. Swift.
- To DRAW. v. n.
1. To perform the office of a beast of draught.
An heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke. Deutr. xxi. 3.
Think every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shakespeare's Othello.
2. To act as a weight.
They should keep a watch upon the particular bias in their minds, that it may not draw too much. Addison's Spectator.
3. To contract; to shrink.
I have not yet found certainly, that the water itself, by mixture of ashes, or dust, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 34.
4. To advance; to move; to make progression.
Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people. 1 Sa. xiv.
He ended; and th' archangel soon drew nigh,
Not in his shape celestial, but as man
Clad to meet man. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 238.
Ambitious meteors! how willing they are to set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Now nearer to the Stygian lake they draw,
Whom from the shore the furly boatman saw,
Observ'd their passage through the shady wood,
And mark'd their near approaches to the flood. Dryden.
And now I faint with grief; my fate draws nigh:
In all the pride of blooming youth I die. Addison's Ovid.
5. To draw a sword.
For his sake
Did I expose myself, pure; for his love
Drew to defend him, when he was beset. Sh. Twelfth Night.
6. To practise the act of delineation.
So much insight into perspective, and skill in drawing, as will enable him to represent tolerably on paper any thing he sees, should be got. Locke.
7. To take a card out of the pack; to take a lot.
He has drawn a black, and smiles. Dryden.
8. To make a fore run by attraction.
9. To retire; to retreat a little.
They returned to the camp where the king was, and the Scots drew a little back to a more convenient post for their residence. Clarendon, b. ii.
10. To DRAW off. To retire; to retreat.
When the engagement proves unlucky, the way is to draw

- off by degrees, and not to come to an open rupture. Collier.
11. To DRAW on. To advance; to approach.
The fatal day draws on, when I must fall. Dryden.
12. To DRAW up. To form troops into regular order.
DRAW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of drawing.
2. The lot or chance drawn.
- DRAWBACK*. n. f. [draw and back.] Money paid back for ready payment, or any other reason.
In poundage and drawbacks I lose half my rent;
Whatever they give me, I must be content. Swift.
- DRAWBRIDGE*. n. f. [draw and bridge.] A bridge made to be lifted up, to hinder or admit communication at pleasure.
Half the buildings were raised on the continent, and the other half on an island, continued together by a drawbridge. Carcro's Survey of Cornwall.
- DRAW'WER*. n. f. [from draw.]
1. One employed in procuring water from the well.
From the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water. Deutr. xxix. 11.
2. One whose business is to draw liquors from the cask.
To drive away the time 'till Falstaff comes, I pray thee do thou stand in some bye room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Let the drawers be ready with wine and fresh glasses;
Let the waiters have eyes, though their tongues must be ty'd. Ben. Johnson's Tavern Academy.
A man of fire is a general enemy to all waiters, and makes the drawers abroad, and his footmen at home, know he is not to be provoked. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 61.
3. That which has the power of attraction.
Love is a flame, and therefore we say beauty is attractive, because physicians observe that fire is a great drawer. Swift.
4. A box in a case, out of which it is drawn at pleasure.
There may be other and different intelligent beings, of whose faculties he has as little knowledge, or apprehension, as a worm, shut up in one drawer of a cabinet, hath of the senses or understanding of a man. Locke.
We will suppose the China dishes taken off, and a drawer of medals supplying their room. Addison on Medals.
5. [In the plural.] The lower part of a man's dress.
The Maltese harden the bodies of their children, and reconcile them to the heat, by making them go stark naked, without shirt or drawers, 'till they are ten years old. Locke.
- DRAW'WING*. n. f. [from draw.] Delineation; representation.
They random drawings from your sheets shall take,
And of one beauty many blunders make. Pope's Epistles.
- DRAW'WINGROOM*. n. f. [draw and room.]
1. The room in which company assembles at court.
What you heard of the words spoken of you in the drawing-room was not true: the sayings of princes are generally as ill related as the sayings of wits. Pope.
2. The company assembled there.
- DRAWN*. [participle from draw.]
- An army was drawn together of near six thousand horse. Clarendon.
So lofty was the pile a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must put the shaft below. Dryd. Fab.
1. Equal; where each party takes his own stake.
If we make a drawn game of it, or procure but moderate advantages, every British heart must tremble. Addison.
2. With a sword drawn.
3. Open; put aside, or unclosed.
What, art thou drawn among those heartless hinds? Shakespeare.
4. Eviscerated.
A curtain drawn, presented to our view
A town besieged. Dryden's Tyran. Love.
5. Induced as from some motive.
There's no more faith in thee than in a stoned prune; no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox. Shakespeare.
- The Irish will better be drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Spenser on Ireland.
As this friendship was drawn together by fear on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear. Hayward.
- DRAW'WELL*. n. f. [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord.
The first conceit, tending to a watch, was a drawwell: the people of old were wont only to let down a pitcher with a handcord, for as much water as they could easily pull up. Grew.
- To DRAWL. v. n. [from draw.] To utter any thing in a slow driveling way.
Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone
Through the long heavy page drawl on. Pope's Dunciad.
- DRAY*. n. f. [drag, Saxon.] The car on which beer is carried.
- DRAYCART*. n. f. [from draw and cart.] A horse-drawn cart.
Let him be brought into the field of election upon his draycart, and I will meet him there in a triumphant chariot. Addison.
When drays bound high, then never cross behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay's Triv.
- DRA'YHORSE*. n. f. [dray and horse.] A horse which draws a dray.
This truth is illustrated by a discourse on the nature of the elephant and the drayhorse. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 60.
- DRA'YMAN*. n. f. [from draw and man.] A man who draws a dray.

D R E

DRA'YMAN. n. f. [dray and man.] One that attends a dray or cart.

A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee. Shakespeare.
Have not coblers, draymen, and mechanicks governed as well as preached? Nay, have not they by preaching come to govern? South's Sermons.

DRA'YPLOUGH. n. f. [dray and plough.] A plough of a particular kind.

The drayplough is the best plough in Winter for miry clays. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRA'ZEL. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from drossel, the scum or dross of human nature; or from dr'sseffe, French, a whore.]
A low, mean, worthless wretch.

As the devil uses witches,

To be their cully for a space,

That, when the time's expir'd, the drazels

For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. i.

DREAD. n. f. [dræd, Saxon.]

1. Fear; terrour; affright.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare. King Lear.

But was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tilotson, Serm. 4.

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terrour of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Gen. ix. 2.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

To thee, of all our good the sacred spring;

To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our softer king. Prior.

DREAD. adj. [dræd, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,

That laid the sentence of dread banishment

On yond' proud man, should take it off again

With words of sooth! Shakespeare's Richard II.

It cannot be, but thou hast murder'd him:

So should a murderer look, so dread, so grim. Shakespeare.

To be expos'd against the warring winds?

To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder. Shakespeare.

Amaze

Be sure, and terrour, seiz'd the rebel host,

When, coming towards them, so dread they saw

The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd. Milt. P. Lost.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,

Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send

The summoning archangels to proclaim

Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 323.

From this descent

Celestial virtues rising, will appear

More glorious and more dread than from no fall. Milton.

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.

To DREAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others, and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake.

To DREAD. v. n. To be in fear.

Dread not, neither be afraid of them.

Deut. i. 8.

DRE'ADER. n. f. [from dread.] One that lives in fear.

I have suspended much of my pity towards the great dreaders of popery. Swift.

DRE'ADFUL. n. f. [dread and full.] Terrible; frightful; formidable.

Thy love, still arm'd with fate,

Is dreadful as thy hate.

Graville.

DRE'ADFULNESS. n. f. [from dreadful.] Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terrour to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewill on Providence.

DRE'ADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful.] Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself can find

A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,

Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,

Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews. Dryden.

DRE'ADLESSNESS. n. f. [from dreadless.] Fearlessness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmae, to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sidney.

DRE'ADLESS. adj. [from dread.] Fearless; unaffrighted; intrepid; unshaken; undaunted; free from terrour.

VOL. I.

D R E

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;

It was complain'd, that thou had'st done great tort

Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5. Stan. 27.

All night the dreadless angel, unpursu'd,

Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way. Milton.

DREAM. n. f. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Merie
Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δρεμα τὸ βίον, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit
Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram.

Ἐλνὴ πῶς ὁ βίος ἐν πάσην ἡμετέραν παίζειν,

Τὴν σπεδὸν μεταδίδει. ἢ φέρε τὰς ὁδοὺς.

Anthol.

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep

In the affliction of those terrible dreams

That shake us nightly.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread;

Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore. Dryden.

Glorious dreams stand ready to restore

The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep

A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,

Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,

He may enguard his dotage, Shakespeare's King Lear.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, so that they receive not outward objects with their usual quickness, in the mind; not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,

But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shakesf. H. IV.

I have nightly since

Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:

We have been down together in my sleep,

Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,

And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 81.

2. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,

Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shak. Cymbeline.

He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,

'Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare. Dryden.

3. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digesting. Locke.

I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Smith.

3. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,

And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryd. All for Love.

To DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,

Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolomey. Dryden.

At length in sleep their bodies they compose,

And dreamt the future fight, and early rose. Dryden's Fab.

DRE'AMER. n. f. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;

The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryden.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometime he angers me,

With telling of the moldwarp, and the ant,

Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakesf. Henry IV.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reueur.

The man of sense his meat devours,

But only smells the peel and flow'rs;

And he must be an idle dreamer,

Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DRE'AMLESS. adj. [from dream.] Without dreams.

The savages of mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless. Camden's Remains.

Pined with grief of folly late repented.

Spenser.

DREARIMENT. n. f. [from dreary.]

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament

Your doleful dreariment.

Spenser's Epithalamium.

2. Horror; dread; terrour. This word is now obsolete.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,

To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;

Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly food,

Inroll'd in flames and smould'ring dreariment. Fairy Queen.

DREARY. adj. [from dreary, Saxon.]

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,

With dreary shrieks did also yell;

And hungry wolves continually did howl

At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul. Fairy Queen.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led

Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden, Æn. 6.

Towns, forests, herds and men promiscuous drown'd,

With one great death deform the dreary ground. Prior.

DREDGE. n. f. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this.] A kind of net.

For oysters, besides gathering by hand, at a great ebb, they have a peculiar dredge; which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spalls of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom of the water. Carew.

TO DREDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne, find a welcome acceptance. Carew.

And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath. Sandys.

We from the dregs of life think to receive,

What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryden.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,

Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him. Bacon.

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fate's design'd,

Than we the dregs and rubbish of mankind. Dryden's Juv.

What diffidence we must be under, whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure. Rogers's Sermons.

TO DREIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty.

I am sure I can fish it out of her: she is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but setting her mill agoing, and I can drein her of them all. Congreve's Old Batchelor.

'Tis drein'd and empty'd of its poison now;

A cordial draught.

Southern.

TO DRENCH. v. a. [from drencan, Saxon.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

In swinish sleep

Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses, being rather newdy'd than stain'd with salt water. Shakespeare's Tempest.

To-day deep thoughts learn with me to drench

In mirth, that after no repenting draws. Milton's Sam.

Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;

Their moisture has already drench'd the plain. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture: in an ill sense.

Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd

Our swords in native blood.

Phillips.

DRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench

Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,

That in our proper motion we ascend. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form. Farrier's Dict.

Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,

And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd. Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Their counsels are more like a drench, that must be poured down, than a draught which might be leisurely drank, if I liked it. King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRENCHER. n. f. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or steeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force.

Dict.

DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme, brent or burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present see,

In danger rather to be drent than brent? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

TO DRESS. v. a. [dresser, French.]

1. To clothe; to invest with cloaths.

The first request

He made, was, like his brothers to be dress'd;

And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest. Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beautifully; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed; for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel and glass gems and counterfeit imagery. Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,

'Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight. Dryd. Epistles.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels only, when dressed out, about the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Where was a fine room in the middle of the house, handsomely dressed up, for the commissioners to sit in. Clarendon.

Skill is used in *dress*ing up power with all the splendour absolute can add to it. Locke.

The mind loses its natural relish of real truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be dressed up, into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

4. To cover a wound with medicaments.

In time of my sickness another chirurgeon dressed her. Wisem.

5. To curry; to rub.

Our infirmities are so many, that we are forced to dress and tend horses and asses, that they may help our needs. Taylor.

Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,

Stood ready, shining all, and smoothly dress'd. Dryd. Æn.

6. To rectify; to adjust.

Adam! well may we labour still to dress

This garden; still to tend plant, herb, and flow'r,

7. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of tormentil, instead of bark. Mortimer's Husbandry.

8. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresseth the lamps he shall burn incense. Ex. xxx.

When you dress your young hops, cut away roots or sprigs. Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. To prepare victuals for the table.

Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress

For his fat grandfire some delicious mess,

In feeding high his tutor will surpass,

An heir apparent of the gourmand race. Dryden.

DRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cloaths; garment; habit.

Dresses laughed at in our forefathers wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity, they are brought about, we think becoming. Government of the Tongue.

A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,

A dress by fates and furies worn alone. Pope's Statius.

2. Splendid cloaths; habit of ceremony.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Clarissa.

3. The skill of adjusting dress.

The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry. Pope.

DRESSER. n. f. [from dress.]

Discontents draue men into slidings. King Charles.

Lord Cottington, being master of temper, and of the most profound dissimulation, knew too well how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler. Clarendon.

It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; where we may see what drives men into a conjugal life: a little burning pushes us more powerfully than greater pleasures in prospect. Locke.

14. To urge; to press to a conclusion.

The experiment of wood that shineth in the dark, we have diligently driven and pursued; the rather for that, of all things that give light here below, it is the most durable, and hath least apparent motion. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 352.

We have thus the proper notions of the four elements, and both them and their qualities, driven up and resolved into their most simple principles. Digby on Bodies.

To drive the argument farther, let us inquire into the obvious designs of this divine architect. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

The design of these orators was to drive some particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal. Swift.

15. To carry on.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury. Bacon, Essay 42.

The bees have common cities of their own,

And common font, beneath one law they live,

And with one common stock their traffick drive. Dryden.

Your Pasimond a lawless bargain drove,

The parent could not sell the daughter's love. Dryden.

The trade of life cannot be driven without partners. Collier.

16. To purify by motion.

The one's in the plot, let him be never so innocent; and the other is as white as the driven snow, let him be never so criminal. L'Estrange.

17. To DRIVE out. To expel.

Tumults and their excitors draue myself and many of both houses out of their places. King Charles.

As soon as they heard the name of Roscetes, they forthwith draue out their governour, and received the Turks into the town. Knolles's History of the Turks.

TO DRIVE. v. n.

1. To go as impelled by any external agent.
The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian; but being distracted, driveth that way where the greater and powerfuller part of the earth is placed. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.
Love, fixt to one, still safe at anchor rides,
And dares the fury of the winds and tides;
But losing once that hold, to the wide ocean born,
It drives away at will, to every wave a scorn. Dryden.
Nor with the rising storm would vainly strive;
But left the helm, and let the vessel drive. Dryden's Æn.
  2. To rush with violence.
Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden's Æn.
Near as he draws, thick harbingers of smoke,
With gloomy pillars, cover all the place;
Whose little intervals of night are broke,
By sparks that drive against his sacred face. Dryd. Ann. Mir.
Then with so swift an ebb the flood drove backward,
It split from underneath the scaly herd. Dryd. All for Love.
The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' imbosc their hives in clusters. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
While thus he stood,
Perithous' dart drove on, and nail'd him to the wood. Dryd.
As a ship, which winds and waves assail,
Now with the current drives, now with the gale;
She feels a double force, by turns obeys
The imperious tempest, and th' impetuous seas. Dryden.
The wolves scampered away, however, as hard as they could drive. L'Estrange.
Thick as autumnal leaves, or driving sand,
The moving squadrons blacken all the strand. Pope's Iliad.
  3. To pass in a carriage.
There is a litter ready; lay him in't,
And drive tow'rd Dover. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Thy flaming chariot wheels, that shook
Heav'n's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drow'st of warring angels disarray'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
  4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.
Our first apprehensions are instructed in authors, which drive at these as the highest elegancies which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 9.
We cannot widely mistake his discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at. Locke.
They look no further before them than the next line;
whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another. Dryd.
We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at. Addison on the War.
  5. To aim; to strike at with fury.
Four rogues in buckram let drive at me. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
At Auxur's shield he drove, and at the blow
Both shield and arm to ground together go. Dryden's Æn.
- TO DRIVEL. v. n. [from drip, drip, dribble, drivel]
1. To flaver; to let the spittle fall in drops, like a child, an idiot, or a dotard.
I met with this Chremes, a driveling old fellow, lean, shaking both of head and hands, already half earth, and yet then most greedy of earth. Sidney, b. ii.
No man could spit from him, but would be forced to drivel like some paralytick, or a fool. Grew's Cosm.
  2. To be weak or foolish; to dote.
This driveling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble. Shakesp. Rom. and Juliet.
I hate to see a brave bold fellow fotted,
Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
A driveling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
- DRIVEL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Slaver; moisture shed from the mouth.
Besides th' eternal drivel, that supplies
The dropping beard, from nostrils, mouth and eyes. Dryden.
  2. A fool; an idiot; a driveller. This sense is now out of use.
What fool am I, to mingle that drivel's speeches among my noble thoughts. Sidney, b. ii.
Millions of years this old drivel Cupid lives,
While still more wretch, more wicked he doth prove. Sidney.
- DRIVELLER. n. f. [from drivel.] A fool; an idiot; a flaverer.
I have heard the arrantest drivellers commended for their shrewdness, even by men of tolerable judgment. Swift.
- DRIVEN. Participle of drive.
They were driven forth from among men. Job xxx. 5.
- DRIVER. n. f. [from drive.]
1. The person or instrument who gives any motion by violence.
  2. One who drives beasts.
He from the many-peopl'd city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the driver's cries. Sandys.
The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death. L'Estrange's Fables.
The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of men, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to. South's Sermons.

3. One who drives a carriage.
Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and, ere the stroke descends;
Low to the wheels his pliant body bends. Dryd. Virg. Æn.
- TO DRIZZLE. v. a. [driselen, German, to shed dew.] To shed in small slow drops; as Winter rains.
When the sun sets the air doth drizzle dew. Shakespeare.
Though now this face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakespeare.
- TO DRIZZLE. v. n. To fall in short slow drops.
And drizzling drops that often do redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear. Spenser.
Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection. Fairy Queen.
This day will pour down,
If I conjecture ought, no drizzling show'r,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire. Milton.
The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- DRIZZLY. adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.
This during Winter's drizzly reign be done,
'Till the new ram receives th' exalted sun. Dryden's Virgil.
- DROIL. n. f. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel.]
A drone; a sluggard.
- TO DROIL. v. n. To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.
Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation,
Drudge in the world, and for their living droil,
Which have no wit to live withouten toyle. Spenser.
We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant: the droiling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond his own village, or the neighbouring markets. Government of the Tongue.
- DROLL. n. f. [droler, French.]
1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester;
a buffoon; a jackpudding.
As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way. L'Estrange.
Why, how now, Andrew! cries his brother droll;
To-day's conceit, methinks, is something dull. Prior.
Democritus, dear droll, revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy heighten'd mirth. Prior.
  2. A farce; something exhibited to raise mirth.
Some as justly fame extols,
For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls. Swift.
- TO DROLL. v. n. [drôle, French.] To jest; to play the buffoon.
Such august designs as inspire your inquiries used to be decided by drolling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous. Glanv. Sceps. Pref.
Men that will not be reasoned into their senses, may yet be laughed or drolled into them. L'Estrange.
Let virtuosoes insult and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature. South's Sermons.
- DRO'LLERY. n. f. [from droll.] Idle jokes; buffoonery.
They hang between heaven and hell, borrow the Christians faith, and the atheists drollery upon it. Government of the Tongue.
- DRO'MEDARY. n. f. [dromedare, Italian.]
A sort of camel so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a day, and some affirm one hundred and fifty. Dromedaries are smaller than common camels, slenderer, and more nimble, and are of two kinds: one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back;
the other lesser, with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel: both are capable of great fatigue, and very serviceable in the western parts of Asia, where they abound.
Their hair is soft and shorn: they have no fangs and foreteeth, nor horn upon their feet, which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads. They drink much at a time, and are said to disturb the water with their feet.
They keep the water long in their stomachs, which, as some report, travellers in necessity will open for the sake of the water contained in them. The stomach of this animal is composed of four ventricles; and in the second are several mouths, which open a passage into twenty cavities, which serve for conservatories of water. See CAMEL. Calmet.
Straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place. 1 Kings iv. 28.
- DRONE. n. f. [dröen, Saxon]
1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.
The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Luxurious kings are to their people lost;
They live, like drones, upon the publick cost. Dryd. Auren.
All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive. Dryden's Virgil.

2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day

More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
Sit idle on the household hearth

A burd'nous drone, to visitants a gaze. Milton's Agonistes.

It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 211.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming

To DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.] To live in idleness; to dream.

What have I lost by my forefathers fault?

Why, was not I the twentieth by descent

From a long restive race of droning kings? Dryd. Span. Fry.

DRONISH. adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish; dreaming; lazy; indolent; unactive.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,

To nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe's Jane Gray.

To DROOP. v. n. [droef, sorrow, Dutch.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,

He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply;

Fallen'd, and fix'd the shame on't in himself. Shakespeare.

I dro p, with struggling spent;

My thoughts are on my sorrows bent. Sandys.

2. To faint; to grow weak; to be despirited.

I find my zenith doth depend upon

A most auspicious star; whose influence

If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes

Will ever after droop. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,

While night's black agents to their prey do rowze Sh. Macb.

When, by impulse from heav'n, Tyrtæus sung,

In drooping foldiers a new courage sprung. Roscommon.

Can flow'rs but droop in absence of the sun,

Which wak'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone. Dryd.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,

Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop. Dryden.

When factious rage to cruel exile drove

The queen of beauty and the court of love,

The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts. Dryden.

I'll animate the soldiers drooping courage,

With love of freedom and contempt of life. Addis. Cato.

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed he began very much to droop and languish. Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downwards.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray,

Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd

Laborious, 'till day droop. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

His head, though gay

Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold,

Hung drooping, unsustain'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,

Which, with a sigh, she rais'd; and this she said. Pope.

DROP. n. f. [drop, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the medicine of our country's weal,

And with him pour we in our country's purge,

Each drop of us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it:

he speaks, to my apprehension, very improbably. Boyle.

Admiring, in the gloomy shade,

Those little drops of light. Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,

I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood

To save one drop of his. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;

And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. f. [gutta serena, Latin.] A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,

Or dim suffusion veil'd! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

To DROP. v. a. [droppan, Saxon.]

1. To pour in drops or single globules.

His heavens shall drop down dew. Deut. xxxiii. 28.

2. To let fall.

Others o'er chimney tops and turrets row,

And drop their anchors on the meads below. Dryden.

One only hag remain'd:

Against a wither'd oak she lean'd her weight,

Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,

And dropp'd an awkward court'fy to the knight. Dryden.

St. John himself will scarce forbear

To bite his pen and drop a tear;

The rest will give a shrug, and cry,

I'm sorry, but we all must die! Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could

With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,

And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,

For certain friends that are both his and mine,

Whose loves I may not drop. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and divest themselves of those visible shapes. Watts's Logick.

4. To utter slightly or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac. Amos vii. 16.

5. To insert indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of Christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them. Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgment in its favour, they suddenly dropt the pursuit. Sharp's Surgery.

7. To quit a master.

I have beat the hoof 'till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to buy more; so that you must even excuse me, if I drop you here. L'Estrange.

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without farther association.

She drilled him on to five and fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another. Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped them. Addison.

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

Thus was the fame of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages, and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish. Swift.

10. To bedrop; to speckle; to variegate with spots. Variis stellatus corpora guttis.

Or, sporting with quick glance,

Shew to the sun their wav'd coats, dropp'd with gold. Milt.

To DROP. v. n.

1. To fall in drops, or single globules.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;

It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven,

Upon the place beneath. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

2. To let drops fall; to discharge itself in drops.

The heavens dropped at the presence of God. Pf. lxvii. 8.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,

The cruel nation, covetous of prey,

Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast. Dryden's Æn.

Beneath a rock he sigh'd alone,

And cold Lycæus wept from every dropping stone. Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.

Philosophers conjecture that you dropp'd from the moon, or one of the stars. Gulliver's Travels.

In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Cheyne.

4. To fall spontaneously.

So may'st thou live, 'till, like ripe fruit, thou drop

Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease

Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.

It was your presumise,

That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Shakefp.

6. To die.

Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us. Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.

Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen.

Addison's Travels.

I heard of threats, occasioned by my verses: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found, and so it dropped. Pope.

8. To come unexpectedly.

He could never make any figure in company, but by giving disturbance at his entry; and therefore takes care to drop in when he thinks you are just seated. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 448.

DROPPING. n. f. [from drop.]

1. That which falls in drops.

Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen-stuff,

And barreling the droppings and the snuff

Of wasting candles. Donne.

2. That which drops when the continuous stream ceases.

Strain out the last dull droppings of your sense,

And rhyme with all the rage of impotence. Pope's Criticism.

DROPLET. n. f. A little drop.

Thou abhorr'dst in us our human griefs,

Scorn'd

D R O

Scorn'd our brine's flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard nature fall. Shakespeare's Timon.

DRO'PSTONE. n. f. [drop and stone.] Spar formed into the shape of drops. Woodward's Foss.

DRO'PWORT. n. f. [drop and wort.] A plant of various species.

DRO'PSICAL. adj. [from drop.] Diseased with a dropsy; hydropical; tending to a dropsy.

The diet of nephritick and dropical persons ought to be such as is opposite to, and subdueth the alkalescent nature of the salts in the serum of the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DRO'PSIED. adj. [from drop.] Diseased with a dropsy.

Where great addition swells, and virtue none,

It is a dropied honour: good alone

Is good. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

DROPSY. n. f. [hydrops, Latin; whence anciently hydropisy, thence dropisy, dropsy] A collection of water in the body, from too lax a tone of the solids, whereby digestion is weakened, and all the parts stuffed. Quincy.

An anasarca, a species of dropsy, is an extravasation of water lodged in the cells of the membrana adiposa. Sharp.

DROSS. n. f. [dnor, Saxon.]

1. The recrement or despumation of metals.

Some scumm'd the dross that from the metal came,

Some stirr'd the molton ore with ladles great,

And every one did frown, and every one did sweat. Fai. Qu.

Should the mixture of a little dross constrain the church to deprive herself of so much gold, rather than learn how, by art and judgment, to make separation of the one from the other? Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

2. Rust; incrustation upon metal.

An emperor, hid under a crust of dross, after cleansing, has appeared with all his titles fresh and beautiful. Addis. on Medals.

3. Refuse; leavings; sweepings; any thing remaining after the removal of the better part; dreggs; feculence; corruption.

Fair proud, now tell me, why should fair be proud,

Sith all world's glory is but dross unclean;

And in the shade of death itself shall shroud,

However now thereof ye little ween? Spenser, Sonnet 2.

That most divine light only shineth on those minds, which are purged from all worldly dross and human uncleanness. Ral.

All treasures and all gain esteem as dross,

And dignities and pow'rs all but the highest. Milt. Pa. Lost.

Such precepts exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson, Sermon 5.

DRO'SSINESS. n. f. [from drop.] Foulness; feculence; rust.

The furnace of affliction refines us from earthly drossiness, and softens us for the impression of God's stamp. Boyle.

DRO'SSY. adj. [from dross.]

1. Full of scorious or recrementitious parts; full of dross.

So doth the fire the droffy gold refine. Davies.

For, by the fire, they emit not only many droffy and scorious parts, but whatsoever they had received either from earth or loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 4.

2. Worthless; foul; feculent.

Your intention hold,

As fire these droffy rhymes to purify,

Or as elixir to change them into gold. Donne.

DRO'TCHEL. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from dretchel. To dretch, in Chaucer, is to idle, to delay. Droch, in Frisick, is delay.]

An idle wench; a sluggard. In Scottish it is still used.

DROVE. n. f. [from drive.]

1. A body or number of cattle: generally used of oxen or black cattle.

They brought to their stations many droves of cattle; and within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward.

A Spaniard is unacquainted with our northern droves. Brown.

2. A number of sheep driven.

A drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which the drivers shall accustom them to. South's Sermons.

3. Any collection of animals.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove,

Now to the moon in wavering morrice move. Milton.

4. A crowd; a tumult.

But if to fame alone thou do'st pretend,

The miser will his empty palace lend,

Set wide with doors, adorn'd with plated brass,

Where droves, as at a city-gate, may pass. Dryden's Juven.

DRO'VEN. part. from drive.

This is fought indeed;

Had we so done at first, we had droven them home

With clouts about their heads. Shak. Anth. and Cleopatra.

DRO'VER. n. f. [from drove.] One that fats oxen for sale, and drives them to market.

The prince hath got your hero.

—I wish him joy of her.

—Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they sell bullocks. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

The drover who his fellow drover meets,

In narrow passages of winding streets. Dryden's Juvenal.

D R O

DROUGHT. n. f. [dnugode, Saxon; drowth, Scottish.]

1. Dry weather; want of rain.

O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain

Than youthful April shall with all his showers:

In Summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still. Sh. Tit. Andr.

Great droughts in Summer, lasting 'till the end of August, some gentle showers upon them, and then some dry weather, portend a pestilent Summer the year following. Bacon.

To south the Persian bay,

And inaccessible th' Arabian drought. Milton's Parad. Reg.

As torrents in the drowth of Summer fail,

So perisht man from death shall never rise. Sandys.

They were so learned in natural philosophy, that they foretold earthquakes and storms, great droughts, and great plagues. Temple.

In a drought the thirsty creatures cry,

And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain. Dryden.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and land-snails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.

2. Thirst; want of drink.

His carcase, pin'd with hunger and with drought. Milton.

One whose drought

Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream,

Whose liquid murmur heard, new thirst excites. Milt. P. L.

DROUGHTINESS. n. f. [from droughty.] The state of wanting rain.

DROUGHTY. adj. [from drought.]

1. Wanting rain; sultry.

That a camel, so patient of long thirst, should be bred in such droughty and parched countries, where it is of such eminent use for travelling over those dry and sandy deserts, where no water is to be had, must be acknowledged an act of providence and design. Ray on the Creation.

2. Thirsty; dry with thirst.

If the former years

Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must

With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat. Phillips.

TO DROWN. v. a. [from drunden, below, German, Skinner, from dnuncian, Saxon, Mr. Lye.]

1. To suffocate in water.

They would soon drown those that refused to swim down the popular stream. King Charles.

When of God's image only eight he found

Snatch'd from the wat'ry grave, and sav'd from nations
drown'd. Prior.

2. To overwhelm in water.

Or so much as it needs

To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakes.

Galleys might be drowned in the harbour with the great ordnance, before they could be rigged. Knolles's History.

3. To overflow; to bury in an inundation; to deluge.

Between the prince and parliament we stand,

The barriers of the state on either hand:

May neither overflow, for then they drown the land. Dry.

4. To immerge; to lose in any thing.

Most men being in sensual pleasures drown'd,

It seems their souls but in their senses are. Davies.

5. To lose in something that overpowers or covers.

Who cometh next will not follow that course, however good, which his predecessors held, for doubt to have his doings drowned in another man's praise. Spenser on Ireland.

To think that the brightness of the sun's body above doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular error.

Wotton's Architecture.

My private voice is drown'd amid' the senate. Add. Cato.

Some aged man, who lives this act to see,

And who in former times remember'd me,

May say, the son, in fortitude and fame,

Outgoes the mark, and drowns his father's name. Dryden.

TO DROWN. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.

There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never nigh drowning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Methought what pain it was to drown!

What dreadful noise of waters in my ears!

What fights of ugly death within mine eyes! Shakes. R. III.

TO DROWSE. v. a. [droosen, Dutch.] To make heavy with sleep.

There gentle sleep

First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd

My drowfed senses uncontroll'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

TO DROWSE. v. n.

1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.

All their shape

Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those

Of Argus; and more wakeful than to drowse,

Charm'd with Arcadian pipe, the pastoral reed

Of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

2. To look heavy; not cheerful.

They rather drows'd, and hung their eyelids down,

Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect

As cloudy men use to their adversaries. Shakesp. Henry VI.

DRO'WSILY.

D R U

DRO'WSILY. adv. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepily; heavily; with an inclination to sleep.

The air swarms thick with wand'ring deities,

Which drowsily like humming beetles rise. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

2. Sluggishly; idly; slothfully; lazily.

We do hastily satisfy our understanding with the first things, and, thereby fatiated, slothfully and drowsily sit down.

Raleigh's History of the World.

DRO'WSINESS. n. f. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.

What a strange drowsiness possesses them? Shakesp. Tempest.

In deep of night, when drowsiness

Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I

To the celestial syren's harmony. Paradise Regained.

What succour can I hope the muse will send,

Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend? Crashaw.

He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses. South's Sermons.

He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness and lying a-bed. Locke.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal, especially in young people. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.

It falleth out well, to shake off your drowsiness; for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war. Bacon's Holy War.

DRO'WSIHED. n. f. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep.

The royal virgin shook off drowsihed;

And rising forth out of her baser boure,

Look'd for her knight. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 2. Stan. 7.

DRO'WSY. adj. [from drowse.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.

Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep. Sidney.

Men drowsy, and desirous to sleep, or before the fit of an ague, do use to yawn and stretch. Bacon's Natural History.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,

Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleaveland.

Drunken at last, and drowsy they depart,

Each to his house. Dryden.

2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight,

Up rose from drowsy couch. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 3.

While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,

The hoary willows waving with the wind,

And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,

And purling streams that through the meadow stray'd,

In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid. Addison.

3. Stupid; dull.

Those inadvertencies, a body would think, even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

TO DRUB. v. a. [druber, to kill, Danish.] To thresh; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.

He that is valiant, and dares fight,

Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by't. Hudibras, p. i.

The little thief had been soundly drubbed with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.

Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been drubbed. Locke.

DRUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A thump; a knock; a blow.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd,

Have bruis'd my body, and bereav'd

My limbs of strength. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

By setting such an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have expos'd them to innumerable drubs and confusions. Addison's Freeholder, No. 50.

TO DRUDGE. v. n. [dreccan, to vex, Saxon; draghen, to carry, Dutch.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

And to crack'd fiddle, and hoarse tabour,

In merriment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras, p. i.

The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch

Our labours late, and early every morning,

Midst Winter frosts; then clad and fed with sparing,

Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day. Otway.

Advantages obtained by industry directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanv. Sceps.

Soon he came to court,

Proffering for hire his service at the gate,

To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait. Dryd. Fables.

I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden's Dedicat. Æn.

What is an age, in dull renown drugg'd o'er!

One little single hour of love is more. Granville.

DRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

He sits above, and laughs the while

D R U

At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute

Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Art thou our slave,

Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,

And dar'st thou, at our sending and command,

Dispute thy coming. Milton's Agonistes, l. 392.

He is content to be their drudge,

And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame and sorrow, and misery. Tillotson, Sermon 4.

DRU'DGER. n. f. [from drudge.]

1. A mean labourer.

2. The drudging-box; the box out of which flower is thrown on roast meat. Dict.

DRU'DGERY. n. f. [from drudge] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,

The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries,

Which they impose. Southern's Oroomoko.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;

Cares be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live. Dryd. Auren.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow. Locke.

Even drudgery himself,

As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews

The palace-stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer, l. 445.

It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery. Swift's Meditations on a Broomstick.

DRU'DGINGBOX. n. f. [drudging and box.] The box out of which flower is sprinkled upon roast meat.

But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,

Not by the drudgingbox to be recall'd. King's Cookery.

DRU'DGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.] Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

DRUG. n. f. [drogue, French.]

1. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law

Is death to any he that utters them. Shak. Rom. and Juliet.

A fleet descry'd

Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds

Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles

Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring

Their spicy drugs. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 640.

And yet no doubts the poor man's draught control;

He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:

Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine

Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryden's Juven.

Judicious physick's noble art to gain,

He drugs and plants explor'd, alas, in vain! Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,

Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage

The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.

In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice

Shall bear a price,

And virtue shall a drug become:

An empty name

Was all her fame,

But now she shall be dumb. Dryden's Albion.

3. A drudge.

He from his first swath proceeded

Through sweet degrees that this brief world affords,

To such as may the passive drugs of it freely command. Shak.

TO DRUG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with medicinal ingredients.

The surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snores. - I've drugg'd their possets,

That death and nature do contend about them. Shak. Macb.

2. To tincture with something offensive.

Oft they assay'd,

Hunger and thirst constraining: drugg'd as oft

With hatefullest disrelish, writh'd their jaws,

With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

DRU'GGET. n. f. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

In druggets dress'd, of thirteen pence a yard,

See Philip's son amidst his Persian guard. Swift.

Common nitre we bought at the druggist's. Boyle.

DRU'GSTER. n. f. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

Common

Common oil of turpentine I bought at the drugsters. Boyle.
 They set the clergy below their apothecaries, the physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body. Atterbury.
DRU'ID. n. f. [deris, oaks, and hud, incantation; which may be as ancient as the Grecian δρυς. Perron; darrach, oak, Erse.]
 The priests and philosophers of the antient Britons.
DRUM. n. f. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]
 1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.
 Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drums. Shak.
 In drums the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole, far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
 And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.
 Now no more the drum
 Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill
 Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood. Phillips.
 2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.
To DRUM. v. n.
 1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.
 2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.
 Now, heart,
 Be ribb'd with iron for this one attempt;
 Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
 Through every active limb for my relief;
 Then take thy rest within the quiet cell;
 For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
To DRU'MBLE. v. n. To drone; to be sluggish. Hammer.
 Take up these cloaths here quickly: where's the cowlstaff?
 Look, how you drumble: carry them to the landress in Datchet mead. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
DRU'MFISH. n. f. The name of a fish.
 The under jaw of the drumfish from Virginia. Woodward.
DRU'MMAJOR. n. f. [drum and major.] The chief drummer of a regiment.
 Such company may chance to spoil the swearing;
 And the drummajor's oaths, of bulk unruly,
 May dwindle to a feeble. Cleveland.
DRU'MMAKER. n. f. [drum and maker.] He who deals in drums.
 The drummaker uses it, and the cabinetmaker. Mortimer.
DRU'MMER. n. f. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.
 Drummer, strike up, and let us march away. Shak. H. IV.
 Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
 And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile. Gay's Trivia.
DRU'MSTICK. n. f. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.
DRUNK. adj. [from drink.]
 1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.
 This was the morn when issuing on the guard,
 Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
 Of seeming arms to make a short assay;
 Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the day. Dryden.
 We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 577.
 2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.
 I will make mine arrows drunk with blood. Deut. xxix. 6.
DRU'NKARD. n. f. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.
 Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
 Of my more fierce endeavour. I've seen drunkards
 Do more than this in sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 My bowels cannot hide her woes,
 But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them. Shakesp. Tit. And.
 God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off. South's Sermons.
DRU'NKEN. adj. [from drink.]
 1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.
 O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!
 Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man. Shakespeare.
 Drunken men imagine every thing turneth round: they imagine also, that things come upon them; they see not well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place; and sometimes they see things double. Bac.
 2. Given to habitual ebriety.
 3. Saturated with moisture.
 Then let the earth be drunken with our blood. Sh. H. VI.
 4. Done in a state of inebriation.
 When your carters, or your waiting vassals,
 Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
 The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
 You strait are on your knees for pardon, pardon. Sh. R. III.
 We should for honour take
 The drunken quarrels of a rake. Swift.
DRU'NKENLY. adj. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.
 My blood already, like the pelican,
 Haft thou tapt out, and drunkenly carows'd. Shak. Rich. II.
 VOL. I.

DRU'NKENNESS. n. f. [from drunken.]
 1. Intoxication with strong liquor.
 Every going off from our natural and common temper;
 and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness. Taylor's Rule of holy living.
 2. Habitual ebriety.
 The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 17.
 3. Intoxication, or inebriation of any kind; disorder of the faculties.
 Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controllable by reason. Spenser.
DRY. adj. [δρῡς, Saxon.]
 1. Arid; without wet; without moisture; not wet; not moist.
 If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon's Natural History.
 When God said,
 Be gather'd now, ye waters under heav'n,
 Into one place, and let dry land appear! Milton's Par. Lost.
 Of turbid elements the sport;
 From clear to cloudy soft, from hot to cold,
 And dry to moist. Thomson.
 2. Without rain.
 A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome Summer;
 if there be a showering April between. Bacon's Nat. History.
 The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season. Addis.
 3. Not succulent; not juicy.
 I will drain him dry as hay;
 Sleep shall neither night nor day
 Hang upon his penthouse lid:
 He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 4. Without tears.
 Dry mourning will decays more deadly bring,
 As a North wind burns a too forward Spring:
 Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go. Dryden's Aurengz.
 5. Thirsty; a-thirst.
 So dry he was for sway. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
 With which, in often interrupted sleep,
 Their frying blood compels to irrigate
 Their dry furr'd tongues. Phillips.
 6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos.
 As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions: either is a vice. B. Johns.
 It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within, or without the fabrick, a piece not so dry as the meer contemplation of proportions; and therefore, I hope, therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself. Wotton's Architecture.
 That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant. Glanv. Sceps. c. 20.
 It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it. L'Estrange.
 Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others. L'Estrange.
 To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilities with which the schools are filled. Burnet's Theory.
 These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament. Pope.
 7. Hard; severe. [Drien anciently to endure, dree, Scottish.]
 I rather hop'd I should no more
 Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
 For hard dry bastings used to prove
 The readiest remedies of love;
 Next a dry diet. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.
To DRY. v. a.
 1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.
 The meat was well, if you were so contented.
 —I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt, and dry'd away,
 And I expressly am forbid to touch it. Shakespeare.
 Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire; as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time or age arefy, as in the same bodies. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 294.
 Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best. Bacon's Nat. History.
 The running streams are deep:
 See, they have caught the father of the flock,
 Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock. Dryden.
 2. To exhale moisture.
 'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one,
 Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
 Which burning upwards in succession, dries
 The tears that stood considering in her eyes. Dryd. Fables.
 The water of the sea, which formerly covered it, was in time exhaled and dried up by the sun. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 3. To wipe away moisture.
 Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries. Denb.
 See, at your blest returning,
 Rage disappears;
 The widow'd isle in mourning,
 Dries up her tears. Dryden's Albion.

4. To scorch with thirst.
Their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst. If. v. 13.
5. To drain; to exhaust.
Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep
Imprudent: him, death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.
- To DRY. v. n. To grow dry; to lose moisture; to be drained of its moisture.
- DRY'ER. n. f. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture.
The ill effects of drinking are relieved by this plant, which is a great dryer and opener, especially by perspiration. Temple.
- DRY'EYED. adj. [dry and eye.] Without tears; without weeping.
Sight so deform, what heart of rock could long Dryey'd behold? Adam could not, but wept. Milt. P. Lost.
- DRY'LY. adv. [from dry.]
1. Without moisture.
  2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.
The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection. Bacon's Henry VII.
Wouldst thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and starves. Dryden's Juven.
  3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.
Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made. Pope.
- DRY'NESS. n. f. [from dry.]
1. Want of moisture; fidity.
The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torrified by the sun, by dryness from the soil, from want and defect of water. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.
Such was the discord which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denham.
The marrow supplies an oil for the inunction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible. Ray on the Creation.
The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres. Arbutnot.
Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible driness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calum-niate nature? Bentley's Sermons.
  2. Want of succulence.
If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't. Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.
  3. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejuneness; barrenness.
Their new flowers and sweetness do not as much corrupt, as the others dryness and squalor, if they chuse not carefully.
Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
Be faithful where the author excels, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it. Garth.
  4. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.
It may be, that by this dryness of spirit God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our wants and weakness.
Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
- DRY'NURSE. n. f. [dry and nurse.]
1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.
  2. One who takes care of another: with some contempt of the person taken care of.
Mistress Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry-nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
- To DRY'NURSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed without the breast.
As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was drynurs'd by a bear. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
- DRY'SHOD. adj. [dry and shod.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.
He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney, b. ii.
Dryshod to pass, she parts the floods in tway;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat
She would command, themselves to bear away. Fairy Queen.
Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?
He has; and hooting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryd. Don Sebast.
- Du'AL. adj. [dualis, Latin.] Expressing the number two.
Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two,

- and another to signify more than two: under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other of the plural. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
- To DUB. v. a. [dubban zo niene, Saxon; addubba tillriddara, Islandick, to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword.]
1. To make a man a knight.
Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder. Shakespeare.
The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubbed, of green or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record. Camden's Remains.
The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward on Edward VI.
  2. To confer any kind of dignity, or new character.
The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossip in this monarchy. Shakespeare. Richard III.
He
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. Shakespeare. H. V.
Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart. Cleaveland.
A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious. Collier on Pride.
O, poet! thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.
These demoniacks let me dub
With the name of legion club. Swift.
A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth. Pope's Horace.
- DUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.
As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubs. Hudibras, p. ii.
- DUBIOUSITY. n. f. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful. A word not used.
Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainities, possibilities for impossibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 4.
- DU'BIOUS. n. f. [dubius, Latin.]
1. Doubtful; not settled in an opinion.
  2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.
No quick reply to dubious questions make. Denham.
We also call it a dubious or doubtful proposition, when there are no arguments on either side. Watts's Logick.
  3. Not plain; not clear.
Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light. Milt. Pa. Lost.
- DU'BIOUSLY. adv. [from dubious.] Uncertainly; without any determination.
Authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict definitive truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
Almanackmakers are so wise to wander in generals, and talk dubiously, and leave to the reader the business of interpreting. Swift's Predictions for the Year 1708.
- DU'BIOUSNESS. n. f. [from dubious.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness.
- DU'BITABLE. adj. [dubito, Latin.] Doubtful; uncertain;
what may be doubted.
- DUBITA'TION. n. f. [dubitatio, Latin.] The act of doubting;
doubt.
Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitatio. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 7.
Dubitatio may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see, is not what I would see. Grew.
- Du'CAL. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke; as, a ducal coronet.
- Du'CAT. n. f. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes: in silver valued at about four shillings and six pence; in gold at nine shillings and six pence.
I cannot instantly raise up the grofs
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
There was one that died in debt: it was reported, where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Bacon.
- DUCK. n. f. [ducken, to dip, Dutch.]
1. A water fowl, both wild and tame.
The ducks that heard the proclamation cry'd,
And fear'd a persecution might betide,
Full twenty mile from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden's Nun's Priest.
Grubs if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into
it. Mortimer's Husbandry.
  2. A word of endearment, or fondness.
Will you buy any tape, or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

3. A declination of the head: so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.

Back, shepherds, back; enough your play,
'Till next sunshine holyday:
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise. Milton.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the waters so as to strike it and rebound.

Neither crows and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy. Arbutn. and Pope's Mari. Scriblerus.
To DUCK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.
The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself be ducked in the fame,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steep. Fairy Queen.
Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heav'n. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thou art wickedly devout;
In Tiber ducking thrice, by break of day. Dryden's Pers.
2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,
And feel a trembling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in mens faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy. Shakesp. R. III.
The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare's Timon.

DU'CKER. n. f. [from duck.]
1. A diver.
2. A cringer. Dict.

To DUCK. v. a. To put under water.
DU'CKINGSTOOL. n. f. [duck and stool.] A chair in which scolds are tied, and put under water.

She in the duckingstool should take her seat,
Drest like herself in a great chair of state. Dorset.
Reclaim the obstinately opprobrious and virulent women, and make the duckingstool more useful. Addison's Freeholder.

DU'CKLEGGED. adj. [duck and leg.] Short legged.
Ducklegg'd, short waisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tiptoes for a kiss. Dryden's Juw. Sat.

DU'CKLING. n. f. [from duck.] A young duck; the brood of the duck.
Ducklings, though hatched and led by a hen, if she brings them to the brink of a river or pond, presently leave her, and in they go. Ray on the Creation.

Ev'ry morn
Amid' the ducklings let her scatter corn. Gay's Pastorals.
DU'CKMEAT. n. f. [duck and meat.] A common plant growing in standing waters.

DUCKCOY. n. f. [See To DUCKOY.] Any means of enticing and ensnaring.

Seducers have found it the most compendious way to their designs to lead captive silly women, and make them the duckcoys to their whole family. Decay of Piety.

To DUCKOY. v. a. [mistaken for decoy: the decoy being commonly practised upon ducks, produced the error.] To entice to a snare.

This fish hath a slender membranous string, which he projects and draws in at pleasure, as a serpent doth his tongue: with this he duckcoys little fishes, and then preys upon them. Grew's Musæum.

DU'CKFOOT. n. f. Black snakeroot, or Mayapple.
The cup of the flower consists of one leaf: the flowers are hexapetalous; the footstalk of the flower comes out from the stalk of the leaf: the fruit is shaped like an urn, and contains many roundish fimbriated seeds. Miller.

DU'CKWEED. n. f. [duck and weed.] The same with duckmeat.

That we call duckweed hath a leaf no bigger than a thyme-leaf, but of a fresher green; and putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom. Bacon's Natural History.

DUCT. n. f. [ductus, Latin.]

1. Guidance; direction.
This doctrine, by fastening all our actions, by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those irony chains which we are born under. Hammond.

2. A passage through which any thing is conducted.
A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 275.

It was observed, that the chyle in the thoracick duct retained the original taste of the aliment. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DUCTILE. adj. [ductilis, Latin.]

1. Flexible; pliable.
Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human light:
One bough it bears; but, wond'rous to behold,
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold. Dryden's Æn.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.
All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread, have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong. Bacon's Natural History.

Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile of all metals. Dryden's Fables, Dedicat.
